1. Scope of the section.—A person proceeded against under S. 133 has two courses open to him:—

(1) To show cause against the order or

(2) to apply for the appointment of a jury to consider whether the order is reasonable or proper.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 527.)

Procedure where person ordered satisfies Magistrate that order is not reasonable.

527. If the person to whom the order of the Magistrate, under section 421, is issued, appears and shows cause against it so as to satisfy the Magistrate who issued it that it is not reasonable and proper, no further proceedings shall be taken in the case.

If party ordered satisfy the Magistrate that the order is not reasonable and proper.

313. If the person to whom the order of the Magistrate is issued, shall appear and show cause against the same, and shall satisfy the Magistrate that the order is not reasonable and proper, no further proceedings shall be taken in the case.

This section applies only where the first course is adopted and Ss. 138 and 139 apply where the second course is adopted.[1] All the three sections are, however, subject to the provisions of S. 139-A, infra where the order is in respect of a way, river, channel or place. In such cases the Magistrate should question the person proceeded against whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of such way, etc., and if he denies it, the matter should first be enquired into. It is only where there is no reliable evidence in such inquiry, in support of such denial that the procedure in this section or S. 138 as the case may be, is to be adopted. Where there is such evidence the proceedings under this chapter should be stayed until the matter of the existence of such right is decided by a competent civil Court. The provisions of this Chapter are not intended to apply to cases where the party has a bona-fide claim of title.[2]

2. "The Magistrate".—The word "Magistrate" in this section will include both the Magistrate who made the order and the Magistrate before whom the party is required to appear under S. 133, ante.[1] Where therefore a party is required to appear before a Magistrate other than the one who made the order, the former can, under this section take evidence in the matter.[2] The Magistrate who made the order can, on the evidence so taken, make the conditional order absolute.[3]

3. "Shall take evidence in the matter".—The provisions of this section are mandatory. Where a party on whom a conditional order under S. 133, supra, has been served, appears and shows cause, the Magistrate is bound, before making the order absolute, to record evidence in the matter[1] and

4. As in a summons case.—Section 244, infra, refers to the taking of evidence in a summons case. It lays down that the complainant if any and all his witnesses should be examined first before the accused is heard and his witnesses are examined. This is the procedure to be adopted in proceedings under this section also and the complainant, i.e., the person who set the law in motion, should examine his evidence first in the presence of the opposite party. The latter is not bound to produce his evidence till this is done. He may cross-examine the complainant's witnesses and then produce his evidence if so advised.[1]

S. 137, Notes 5—8.

5. Summons to witnesses.—Inasmuch as the procedure as to the taking of evidence to be adopted in enquiries under this section is that prescribed for summons cases and inasmuch as in the latter classes of cases S. 244, sub-S. (2) provides for the issue of summons to witnesses, the person proceeded against under the section is also entitled to apply to the Court to compel the attendance of his witnesses by issuing summons and the Court should issue summons to witnesses if necessary in such cases.[1]

6. Sub-Section (2).—Sub-S. (2) provides for the dropping of proceedings initiated by an order under S. 133. But this can be done only after the evidence is recorded under sub-S. (1) and the Court is satisfied, on such evidence that the preliminary order was not reasonable and proper.[1] The existence of a genuine dispute as to title suitable for decision by a Civil Court may be sufficient to show that the order was not reasonable and proper within the meaning of this section.[2]

7. If the Magistrate is not so satisfied.—The Magistrate, if he is not satisfied that the preliminary order is not reasonable and proper, should make it absolute. But as has been seen already such an order can be made only on the basis of evidence recorded by him. So where the party appears to show cause against the preliminary order and the enquiry is started under this section, the Magistrate cannot, even if the party failed to appear at a subsequent hearing make the order absolute without any evidence, since the procedure laid down in this section is that of a summons case and Ss. 249—251, infra, require that evidence must be taken on behalf of complainant when the other side denies the offence.[1] Where the party proceeded against is required to appear before the Magistrate who made the conditional order, the latter must himself take the evidence and cannot forward the proceedings to another Magistrate for taking evidence, and then act upon the evidence so taken.[2]

8. The order shall be made absolute.—The order referred to in sub-S. (3) is the order issued under S. 133, supra. The Magistrate can only confirm the order made under that section. So, if no preliminary order exists[1-a] or if the preliminary order was itself illegal as being made without jurisdiction[1] or too vague and indefinite[1-b] it cannot be made absolute under this section. The provisions of this chapter should be worked so as not to become themselves a nuisance to the community at large. Although every man is bound to use his own property in such a way as not to work damage or harm to his neighbour, yet on the other hand, no one has a right to interfere with free and full enjoyment by another of his property. So an order cannot be made absolute except on clear and absolute proof that the act complained of is a nuisance and a removal thereof is absolutely necessary.[2] Where the Magistrate confirms an order under this section, he should lay down fully the grounds on which he acted and in deciding on the objections of the parties, he ought to record in each case the grounds of his rejection of such objection.[3] A verbal order issued under S. 133, supra, cannot amount to or have the force of an order made absolute under this section.[4] The Magistrate cannot make an order absolute under this section, on grounds different from those on which the preliminary order under S. 133 was issued.[5]

S. 137, Notes 8—10.

9. Effect of the order being made absolute.—See S. 140, infra.

Once a Magistrate confirms a conditional order, under this section his successor in office cannot go behind it and question its legality.[1]

10. High Court's powers of Revision.—An order absolute under this section can be varied or confirmed by the High Court in revision.[1] The provisions of this section being mandatory an order passed in contravention thereof is not merely an irregularity within the meaning of S. 537 of the Code but is an illegal order made without jurisdiction.[2] The High Court will interfere in revision in the following cases:—

(1) Where the Magistrate fails to take evidence under this section but confirms an order on information which is not legal evidence.[3]

Procedure where he claims jury.

138.* (1) On receiving an application under section 135 to appoint a jury, the Magistrate shall—

(a) forthwith appoint a jury consisting of an uneven number of persons not less than five, of whom the foreman and one half of the remaining members shall be nominated by such Magistrate, and the other members by the applicant;

(b) summon such foreman and members to attend at such place and time as the Magistrate thinks fit; and

(c) fix a time within which they are to return their verdict.

(2) The time so fixed may, for good cause shown, be extended by the Magistrate.

Constitution of jury.

On receiving such application, such Magistrate shall forthwith appoint a jury consisting of an uneven number of persons not less than five, of whom the foreman and one-half of the remaining members shall be nominated by such Magistrate, and the other members by the applicant.

Report of jury and order thereon.

The time within which the report is to be made shall be fixed by the Magistrate in the order for the appointment of the jury, and may from time to time be extended by him. When the jury have made their report, the order of the Magistrate must be founded thereon, except in cases falling under section 528.

Attendance of jury.

524. Such Magistrate may summon so many jurors as may be necessary, and such persons shall be bound to attend and make their inquiry and report.

Any juror failing to attend, or neglecting his duty as a juror, shall be liable to be dealt with under section 174 of the Indian Penal Code.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in the Code of 1872—

Proceeding in case of neglect by jury.

S. 138, Notes 1—6.

Changes introduced in 1882—

The last paragraph of S. 523 of the Code of 1872 was enacted as a separate section, viz., S. 141 in the Code of 1882. In other respects the changes were not material.

Changes introduced in 1898—

Sub-S. 2 was newly added.

Any juror failing to attend, or neglecting his duty as a juror shall be liable to be dealt with under S. 174 of the Indian Penal Code, have also been added in 1871 Code as S. 524, para. 2. There was no similar provision in the 1861 Code.[1]

2. Object of the Section.—The provisions for the appointment of a jury in cases of alleged public nuisances are intended to operate as a check to the exercise of summary and arbitrary dealing with the rights of property.[1]

3. "Forthwith appoint".—This section is imperative in its terms.[1] When a person applies under S. 135 for the appointment of a jury the Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to do so, but[2] is bound to appoint one. He cannot decide the matter by making a local inquiry himself.[3] Even where the Magistrate finds under S. 139-A, that the person has no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the public right, the Magistrate is bound to appoint a jury where the party applies for it.[4]

4. "The Magistrate".—It has been seen in Note 6 to S. 135, ante, that the application for the appointment of a jury should be made only to the Magistrate who made the conditional order. The "Magistrate" referred to in this section and who is to make the appointment is consequently the Magistrate who made the conditional order and not the Magistrate before whom the party may have been required to apply. Hence the Magistrate who passed the conditional order under S. 133 cannot refer the matter for disposal to another Magistrate if a jury is demanded.[1]

5. "Forthwith".—The word "forthwith" merely means that the Magistrate shall appoint a jury as soon as he reasonably can.[1]

6. Uneven number of persons not less than five.—The section requires that the jury shall consist of an uneven number of persons not less than five.

S. 138, Notes 6—7.

So a jury of only 3 persons, will not be a properly constituted one and an order based on the verdict of such a jury will be invalid.[1] Nor is it enough merely to have five persons in the jury; it is also necessary that all of them should act together. Thus if one out of the 5 jurors dies, or is ill or refuses to act or for some other cause remains absent, the decision of the jury will be wholly void and the Magistrate cannot act upon that finding.[2]

7. Nomination of members of jury, how made.—The nomination of jurors under this section is to be made partly by the Magistrate and partly by the applicant.[1] The irregularity in the appointment of the jury cannot be by itself a ground for setting aside the proceedings.[1-a]

Nomination by Magistrate.—In making nominations of the jurors and of the foreman, the following should be noted:—

Firstly.—The Magistrate cannot delegate the function to any one else.[2]

Secondly.—He cannot nominate less than half the number of jurors. If for instance he nominates only the foreman, or two of the jurors it will not be a legally constituted jury.[3]

Thirdly.—He should exercise his own discretion and judgment and should not merely accept the persons put forward by the complainant.[4]

Fourthly.—He should not select persons who will be interested in upholding his conditional order,[5] friends and supporters of the complainant[6] or the complainant and his witnesses[7] must not be appointed.

If there is any disregard of these principles in the selection of the jury, it will be illegal and the finding and further proceedings will be void, because, the nomination of a jury is a nomination of the Court which has to try the case, and irregularity with regard to that, is an irregularity which goes to the root of the proceedings[8] and S. 537, infra, will not cure such irregularity. Thus in Re Kothari[9] the Magistrate appointed the nominees of the complainant as jurors without exercising his own discretion. They were respectable and impartial men: and in fact they gave a finding partly favourable to the applicant who applied for the appointment of the jury: still it was held that the constitution of the jury was illegal. S. 138, Notes 7—12.

Nomination by the applicant.—The other half of the jury is to be nominated by the applicant. It is an advantage given to him and not to his opponent. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to veto the nomination by the applicant of any person as a juror.[10]

The appointment of the jury cannot be made by ballot from the ordinary list of jurors.[11]

Every appointment or cancelment of the jury should be made in the presence of parties.[12] For the form appointing a jury, vide Sch. V, Form No. 17.

8. Duty of jurors.—The jurors should act together and should give their verdict of deliberation; they should not act like partisans.[1] Also see Ss. 138 and 139-A.

9. Summons to jurors.—The Magistrate has the power to issue summons to a juror to attend at any particular place and time. The procedure laid down in S. 68 and the following sections should be observed in summoning the jurors. The time when and the place where the juror is to attend should be specifically mentioned in the summons.[1]

10. Disobedience of summons by juror.—See S. 174 of the Penal Code.

11. Extension of time.—Under the Code of 1861 there was no provision for the extension of the time fixed for the return of the verdict by the jury and it was held that a verdict submitted after the expiry of the period fixed, was invalid.[1] In the later Codes the power to extend the time has been given to the Magistrates. The granting of further time is a matter in the discretion of the Magistrate.[2]

12. Fresh jury.—When the jury appointed under this section perversely refuses to return a verdict[1] or for any other cause the jury fails to send the verdict within the time allowed[2] or if the report of the jury is defective and illegal because of the non-participation of any of the jurors[3] then the Magistrate may appoint a fresh jury or may proceed to pass such other order as he thinks fit under S. 141.

S. 138, Notes 13—14.

13. Pendency of civil suits.—The fact that a civil suit is pending with reference to the question whether the right claimed is a public one or not, will not preclude a Magistrate from continuing the proceedings under this section.[1] But when there is no proof of urgency or imminent danger to the public interests, it is improper for a Magistrate to make use of the exceptional powers given by this chapter as a criminal act in regard to a matter which is already the subject-matter of a civil suit.[2]

14. Appeal and Revision.—There is no right of appeal from the decision of a jury appointed to try whether the order of a Magistrate for the removal of a nuisance is reasonable and proper.[1] The District Magistrate cannot refer the matter to the High Court under S. 435, infra, because the decision of the jury is not a proceeding in a Criminal Court which the District Magistrate can call for and examine.[2] But the High Court can in its revisional jurisdiction vested under S. 439 infra, call for the records and revise the orders passed under this section.[3]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

The differences between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872, were only verbal.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

(1) Under the Code of 1872 the decision of the Magistrate had to be, in all cases according to the opinion of the majority of the jury.

Report of jury and order thereon.

The time within which the report is to be made shall be fixed by the Magistrate in the order for the appointment of the jury, and may from time to time be extended by him. When the jury have made their report, the order of the Magistrate must be founded thereon, except in cases falling under section 528.

Procedure where jury finds Magistrate's order to be reasonable.

526. If, in a case referred to a jury, the jury find that the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper, as originally made, or subject to a modification which the Magistrate accepts, the Magistrate who issued the order, or before whom cause was shown, shall give notice of such finding to the person to whom the order was issued, and shall add to such notice an order to obey the aforesaid order, within a time to be fixed in the notice, and an intimation that, in case of disobedience, such person will be liable to the penalty provided by section 188 of the Indian Penal Code.

If Jury find order of Magistrate to be reasonable and proper.

312. If in a case referred to a jury, the jury shall find that the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper, the Magistrate shall give notice thereof to the person to whom the order was issued, and shall add to such notice an order to obey the order first mentioned within a time to be fixed therein under the penalty provided by the Indian Penal Code as aforesaid.

If such latter order shall not be obeyed, the Magistrate may proceed as in the last preceding section.

S. 139, Notes 1—3.

Under the Code of 1882, where the jury found that the original order was reasonable and proper subject to a modification and the Magistrate accepted it then the order, subject to such modification had, to be made absolute.

(2) The words "In other cases, no further proceedings shall be taken" were newly added.

Difference between 1898 and 1882 Codes—

The words "under this chapter" in sub-S. (2) are new.

2. Scope of the section.—This section prescribes the procedure to be adopted by the Magistrate when a finding is submitted by the jury appointed by him under S. 138. Where the majority of jurors find his original order reasonable and proper the Magistrate "shall" make the order absolute. Where modifications are suggested by the majority of the jurors and if the Magistrate accepts such modifications, the original order shall be made absolute with those modifications. In other cases the Magistrate should not take further proceedings under this chapter.

3. "Majority of the jurors".—The word "majority" in this section means the majority of the persons nominated as jurors and not merely the persons attending or acting as jurors. Thus where five persons are nominated as jurors and one or more of them do not take part in the inquiry and report, the verdict of those who take part is not a finding of a "majority" and the Magistrate cannot make the order absolute.[1]

Only the persons appointed under S. 138 could act as jurors. Thus where 5 jurors are elected by the Magistrate and the applicant under S. 138, and one of them falls ill, his place cannot be filled up by the foreman. The finding submitted by the jury so constituted cannot be acted upon by the Magistrate and the original order cannot be made absolute. If it is made absolute and the order is disobeyed by the party, he cannot be convicted under S. 188 of the Penal Code.[2]

Where a number of jurors do not agree with one another in every respect but the majority agree that a certain order passed by a Magistrate taken as a whole is not necessary, it should be held that the majority considered the order not reasonable and proper.

Illustration.

7 persons were appointed as jurors in a proceeding under S. 133. 3 of them found that the order was reasonable and the other 3 that it was unreasonable. The remaining juror found that the order to remove the obstruction entirely was not necessary. It was held that that the majority of the jury must be deemed to be against the order of the Magistrate.[3]

4. Procedure to be adopted by the jury.—This chapter does not lay down any rules as to the procedure to be adopted by the jury before arriving at a finding. There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the jury is bound to take evidence in the matter. According to the High Court of Allahabad they are not so bound[1] while according to the High Court of Calcutta they are so bound.[2]

Where the jurors do not consult together but deliver separate and independent opinions[3] or where some of the jurors blindly follow the opinion of their fellow jurors,[4] the finding of the jury is illegal and cannot be acted upon.

The recommendations of the jury directing parties to do a certain thing can only be enforced under S. 140, sub-S. (2). They do not by themselves constitute a contract between the parties.[5]

5. Objection to the finding of the Jury.—Objections to the verdict of the jury should be made as specifically as possible. They should be of such a character as to justify the conclusion that the verdict was not a proper verdict because the jury did not in fact apply a judicial discretion to the case, or that the verdict was such as the jury could not have arrived at by a proper exercise of discretion upon the materials before them.[1]

6. "Magistrate shall make the order absolute".—The "Magistrate" in this section refers only to the Magistrate to whom an application under S. 135 is made and who appoints the jury under S. 138. He cannot transfer the case to any other Magistrate after appointing the jury.[1]

If the jury or the majority of the jurors find that the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper, the Magistrate is bound to make the order absolute.[2] He cannot refuse to make the order absolute on the ground that the verdict is inconsistent or for any other reason.[3] If on the other hand the jury or the majority of jurors do not find the order to be reasonable and proper, the order cannot be made absolute. Thus where a conditional order under S. 133 was to remove the houses of certain prostitutes, the jury appointed under S. 138, only recommends that the prostitutes should be asked to mend their habits, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order the removal of the houses.[4]

If modifications are suggested by the jury and the Magistrate accepts such modifications, the original order can be made absolute only with those modifications. The Magistrate cannot split up the finding of the jury and accept one part and reject the other.[5] See also Note 7.

7. "In other cases".—The other cases contemplated under this sub-clause are (a) where the jury or the majority of the jurors find that the order of the Magistrate is not reasonable and proper and (b) where the majority recommends certain modifications to the Magistrate's order, which are not accepted by him. In both these cases the Magistrate should stay his hands and not take further proceedings under this chapter.[1]

S. 141 provides for the case where the jury fails to return a finding.

8. Bona fide claim of right—whether jury can try.—Vide S. 139-A, infra.

9. Appeal, Revision.—No appeal lies from the decision of a jury appointed to consider whether the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper,[1] nor has the District Magistrate the jurisdiction to call for the records of the jury and examine the same under S. 435.[2]

139-A. (1) Where an order is made under Section 133 for the purpose of preventing obstruction, nuisance or danger to the public in the use of any way, river, channel or place, the Magistrate shall, on the appearance before him of the person against whom the order was made, question him as to whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of the way, river, channel or place, and if he does so, the Magistrate shall, before proceeding under section 137 or section 138, inquire into the matter.

Procedure where existence of public right is denied.

(2) If in such inquiry the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial, he shall stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent Civil Court; and, if he finds that there is no such evidence, he shall proceed as laid down in section 137 or section 138, as the case may require.

(3) A person who has, on being questioned by the Magistrate under sub-section (1), failed to deny the existence of a public right of the nature therein referred to, or who, having made such denial, has failed to adduce reliable evidence in support thereof, shall not in the subsequent proceedings be permitted to make any such denial, nor shall any question in respect of the existence of any such public right be inquired into by any jury appointed under section 138.

1. Scope, object and applicability.—This section was newly inserted in the Code by S. 26 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Amendment Act XVIII of 1923; prior thereto the Courts had by judicial decisions engrafted on the Code a law which may generally be stated as follows:—Where the party proceeded against set up a claim of title in respect of the way, river, channel or place in question, the Magistrate had to determine whether such claim was bona fide or mala fide and in the former case to refer the parties to a civil suit.[1] The legislature has in the present section given legislative effect to the law, as so declared but with one important modification. It is not now necessary that the claim should be bona fide. Where the existence of the public right is denied, the Magistrate is to inquire into the matter and, if in such enquiry, there is reliable evidence in support of such denial, the proceeding should be stayed.[2] The object with which this section is enacted is to prevent the Magistrate from arrogating to himself the functions of a Civil Court and from instituting an elaborate enquiry with regard to the rights of the parties.[3]

This section applies only to those cases where the party served with the preliminary order denies the existence of the public right over the place obstructed and not to the cases where such party admits the public right but denies only the fact of obstruction.[4] Where an order under S. 133 has been made in respect of a way, river, channel or place, and the party proceeded against appears before the Magistrate in pursuance of such order, it is the procedure provided by this section that should first be followed, and then if necessary that provided in Ss. 137 and 138, ante.[5] In other words even after an inquiry under this section it is open to the person proceeded against to show cause under S. 137 or to claim an appointment of the jury under S. 138. The fact that the Magistrate found under S. 139-A, that there was no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the public right does not disentitle the party from claiming the inquiry under S. 137 or 138.[6]

2. The Magistrate shall question as to existence of public right.—The provisions of this section are mandatory and the first duty of the Magistrate, on the appearance of the party in pursuance of the notice under S. 133, is to question him without waiting for the objection being raised by the party, as to whether he denies the existence of the public right over the place of obstruction.[1] Where however the party admits the public right but denies only the obstruction omission to question him in the manner stated above is only an irregularity within the meaning of S. 537, infra.[2] S. 139-A, Notes 2—4.

3. Claim of title—Time to plead.—Under the law as it stood before the introduction of this section, the claim of title had to be taken on or before the hearing and, if the party claimed a jury without raising the question of title he could not subsequently raise that question.[1] It was also held that when a party, in ignorance of his rights or for some other reason asks for the appointment of a jury he could not be said thereby to have admitted existence of a public right.[2] Under sub-S. (3) of this section the question of title should be raised at the time of and in answer to the question by the Magistrate when the party first appears before him.

4. "Shall enquire into the matter".—Even prior to the passing of this section it had been held that, where the party proceeded against denied the existence of a public right and claimed a title in himself the Magistrate should enquire into the matter, but that the enquiry should be, to find out if the claim of title was made bona fide or merely to oust his jurisdiction.[1-a] Under the present section the Magistrate should inquire into the matter to find out if there is a reliable evidence in support of the denial of public right.[1]

This enquiry is clearly something to be kept quite distinct from the enquiry which may be held later under S. 137, if the Magistrate finds that there is no prima facie reliable evidence in support of the denial of the public right. There is no particular form prescribed in which this enquiry should be conducted. The Magistrate is left an absolute discretion as to how far he will go or upon what materials he will act in considering whether the defendant seems likely to have such a case in support of his denial as may make it seem unfitting for the Criminal Court to proceed.[2] There does not seem to be any obligation on the part of the Magistrate to examine witnesses produced in such an enquiry. He is to enquire into the matter of existence of a public right and if it appears that there is reliable evidence in support of the denial he must stay proceedings. The section only requires that the Magistrate should see whether there is reliable evidence in support of the denial and not that the non-existence of the public right should be proved. It is therefore not the duty of the Magistrate to satisfy himself if the opposite party has succeeded in proving the non-existence of the public right.[3] Since the enquiry is to find out if there is reliable evidence in support of the denial, the party denying the public right must be called upon to produce evidence in support of such denial and such evidence must be legal evidence.[4] In order to satisfy himself if there is legal evidence, the Magistrate may allow the cross-examination of witnesses adduced in support of the denial.[5] The enquiry being of a summary character it is not intended that the party complaining of obstruction should be required to adduce evidence to counteract the evidence sought to be made out by the other party.[6] There is however nothing in this section excluding the inherent powers of the Magistrate under S. 540, infra, to allow such evidence to be given.[7]

The provisions of this section are mandatory and cannot be waived by the party. The Magistrate is bound to hold the enquiry as required by this section.[8]

5. Delegation of enquiry.—The enquiry should be held only by the Magistrate before whom the party appears in pursuance of an order under S. 133 and cannot be delegated to a Magistrate subordinate to him. The reason is that it is on the result of the enquiry that the subsequent procedure either to stay proceedings or proceed further rests. The question being whether there is or is not reliable evidence in support of the denial of the right, the value of evidence is better determined by the Magistrate who hears it himself.[1]

6. Reliable evidence—Sub-S. (2).—It has been seen in Note 4, ante, that in coming to a decision as to whether there is reliable evidence in support of the denial set up, the Magistrate should not consider whether the claim was established to his satisfaction but only whether it was supported by prima facie evidence. It is not, therefore, necessary to weigh the evidence produced on both sides and come to the conclusion. The Magistrate should only take the evidence in support of the denial and see whether as it stands he could come to the conclusion that the evidence was reliable.[1] Public records such as settlement registers revenue records and survey maps which support the person denying the existence of public right are 'reliable evidence' within the meaning of this section.[2] A long user of the property claimed to be public, by the person denying the public right was held to be reliable evidence in support of such denial so as to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.[3]

7. "Shall stay proceedings".—The section as has been seen already is imperative and the Magistrate is bound to stay the proceedings if there is reliable evidence in support of the denial. He has no discretion in the matter.[1] The Court is not, however, directed to quash the proceedings altogether but only to stay the same until the adjudication by a Civil Court.[2] The proceedings need not be stayed indefinitely and the Magistrate can fix a time for establishing the right in a Civil Court.[3] If the party does not, within a reasonable time, have recourse to the Civil Court the Magistrate can proceed to make the order absolute.[4] There is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate from drawing up fresh proceeding on proper materials even though proceedings may have been stayed previously under this section.[5]

8. Until decided by a competent Civil Court.—This section is silent as to which party should go first to the Civil Court to establish title. In decisions decided prior to the enactment of this section in 1923 it was held that the Magistrate had power, while staying proceedings, to direct a particular party to establish his title in a Civil Court[1] provided he passed such order after consideration of the evidence adduced by the parties.[2] But under the present section it has been held that there is nothing in the section which entitles the Magistrate to say which party should file the suit. By this stay the Magistrate as it were ousts his own jurisdiction to decide anything including the question of onus of proof.[3]

9. Procedure where there is no reliable evidence.—Where the Magistrate finds on enquiry that there is no reliable evidence in support of the denial of the existence of a public right, he should record his reason for his decision and proceed to decide the case under S. 137 or S. 138, ante as the case may be without further reference to the claim.[1] In such a case, the mere fact that the party has filed a civil suit to establish his right is no ground for staying the criminal proceedings.[2]

10. Consequences of failure to deny the public right.—Sub-S. 3 of this section provides that a failure to deny at the proper time the existence of the public right will disentitle the person to make any such denial at any subsequent stage of the proceedings and that the existence of such public right cannot be enquired into by any jury appointed under S. 138, ante. Even before the introduction of this section it had been held that it was no part of the duty of the jury to determine the rights of parties in the property but that they could decide only the reasonableness or otherwise of the order passed by the Magistrate. See the following cases.[1]

11. Revision.—A non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of this section will afford a valid ground for revision. Thus the High Court will revise the order of the Lower Court in the following cases:— S. 139-A, Note 11.

(1) Where the Magistrate weighs the evidence and comes to a conclusion on the merits instead of staying proceedings where there is reliable evidence in support of denial.[1]

(2) Where he proceeds to take evidence under S. 137 without holding the enquiry referred to in this section[2] and passes final orders under those sections.[3]

(3) Where he overlooks the provisions of this section and passes orders on the test of bona fides of the claim and not on the existence or non-existence of reliable evidence.[4]

(4) Where he makes over the enquiry contemplated under this section to a Subordinate Magistrate.[5]

(5) Where the order negatives the rights given under S. 138 by reason of not finding reliable evidence in support of the denial during the enquiry.[6] and the Magistrate who issued such order may proceed to carry it into execution at the expense of such person, and may realise such expenses, either by the sale of any building, goods, or other property removed by his order, or by the distress and sale of such moveable property of such person within or without his jurisdiction. If such property is without his jurisdiction, the order shall authorize its attachment and sale when endorsed by the Magistrate in whose jurisdiction the goods are attached.

(6) Where the Magistrate fails to question the party proceeded against if he denies the existence of the public right and fails to ask him to produce evidence in support of denial.[7]

No suit shall lie in respect of anything necessarily or reasonably done in carrying out the provisions of this section.

Procedure where jury finds Magistrate's order to be reasonable.

526. If, in a case referred to a jury, the jury find that the order of the Magistrate is reasonable and proper, as originally made, or subject to a modification which the Magistrate accepts, the Magistrate who issued the order, or before whom cause was shown, shall give notice of such finding to the person to whom the order was issued, and shall add to such notice an order to obey the aforesaid order, within a time to be fixed in the notice, and an intimation that, in case of disobedience, such person will be liable to the penalty provided by section 188 of the Indian Penal Code.

If such latter order is not obeyed, the Magistrate may proceed as in section 525.

Procedure in case of disobedience or neglect by party ordered.

311. If the person to whom the order mentioned in section 308 is issued shall not obey such order, or show cause against the same as hereinafter provided, or petition for a jury within the time specified in such order, he shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in that behalf in section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Magistrate who issued such order may proceed to carry such order into execution at the expense of such person, and may realize such expenses either by the sale of any building, goods, or other property removed by his order, or by the distress and sale of personal property of the person aforesaid, and no suit or action shall be entertained in any Court in respect of anything necessarily or reasonably done to give effect to such order.

S. 140, Notes 1—5.

1. Legislative changes.—

1. Difference between 1861 and 1872 Codes:

The words "such moveable property of such person" which occurred in the Code of 1861 were substituted by the words "the personal property of the person."

2. Difference between 1872 and 1882 Codes:

The words "anything necessarily done in carrying out the provisions of this section" which occurred in the last paragraph of S. 525 of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "anything done in good faith under this section."

2. Notice.—The provisions of the section as to the issue of notice are mandatory and the Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to issue such notice. Thus he cannot refuse to issue it on the ground that a civil suit has been filed against the person proceeded against and a temporary injunction obtained restraining him from doing the act ordered to be done by the order absolute.[1]

The notice must however, direct only the removal of the nuisance. The Magistrate cannot direct the manner in which the nuisance is to be removed.[2]

3. Form of Notice.—See Schedule V, Form XVIII, infra.

4. Notice of order absolute under S. 137, by whom to be given.—Where a conditional order directs a person to appear before a Magistrate other than the Magistrate issuing the order, and the former, after enquiry under S. 137 makes the order absolute, it is he who is entitled to issue the notice under this section and not the Magistrate who originally issued the conditional order.[1]

5. Non-compliance with notice—Effect of.—Non-compliance with the notice will render the person against whom it is issued liable to a prosecution under S. 188 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate may also proceed against him in the manner prescribed by sub-S. (2) of the section.

The question, however, whether and what action should be taken on the failure to comply with the notice, is a matter of judicial discretion to be exercised by the Court after taking into consideration the whole of the circumstances of the case.[1] Thus, where after a notice was issued under this section to a party a temporary injunction was issued in a civil suit restraining him from performing the acts ordered to be done by the notice, it was observed by the High Court of Calcutta that the Court can, under such circumstances, desist from any further proceedings against him under this section until the conclusion of the civil suit.[2] But a Magistrate has no power to refuse to enforce the orders of his predecessor merely on the ground that it was not legal or valid[3] though a refusal to enforce an order on the ground that such enforcement has become unnecessary is not ultra vires.[4] So also the question as to the validity of an order passed under S. 133 cannot be raised in a trial for an offence under S. 188, I. P. C. for disobedience of the order.[5]

6. "Is not performed within the time fixed".—The time to be allowed for removing the nuisance is entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate who should exercise such discretion after taking into consideration the danger and inconvenience to the public.[1] Where the Court fixes a time for the removal of the nuisance, no action can be taken by the Magistrate for non-compliance with the notice before the expiry of the period so fixed.[2]

7. Death of person against whom conditional order is made.—Where the person against whom an order for removal of nuisance is made dies, the order ceases to have any force, and no further steps as provided by this section can be taken against his legal representatives.[1]

8. Costs.—Where the Court itself proceeds to carry out the order under the provisions of this section only the actual costs incurred for that purpose can be charged to the party. If, in so carrying out the work the Court undertakes to combine some other work also and the actual costs could not therefore be ascertained, the party could not be made liable for any approximate amount.[1]

The question as to who is liable for the costs of the removal of a nuisance where more than one person is proceeded against under S. 133 is to be determined on a consideration of the question as to who was actually served with notice of the proceedings and it would obviously be unjust for the Magistrate to make an order for recovery of the costs from a party who was not actually served with notice of the proceedings.[2]

9. Title to property removed.—The party against whom the order is enforced is entitled to the property gathered as a consequence of the removal. The Court has no right to dispose it of as it thinks most beneficial to the general public and if any of it is so utilised by the Court the party is entitled to claim a deduction of its value from the costs.[1]

10. "Moveable property"—Meaning of.—The words "by the distress and sale of any other moveable property" shows that the words "moveable property" in this section mean tangible moveable property.[1]

has been held by the Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta that a suit to set aside the order of the Magistrate or to prevent him from carrying his order into effect, is also barred.[2] Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench said:—

"The object of the Act was to enable the Magistrate to make an order speedily, and speedily to carry that order into execution. S. 311 provides that no suit or action shall be entertained in any Court in respect of anything necessarily or reasonably done to give effect to such order. It would, as it appears to me, be mere trifling with the Act, if when it says that no action shall be entertained in any Court in respect of anything necessarily or reasonably done to give effect to an order of this nature, we should hold that the Civil Courts could interfere to restrain the Magistrate from giving effect to his order at all."

But this section does not bar a suit for a declaration that the property treated as a public thoroughfare is the private property of the plaintiff.[3] Nor does a failure to resort to the remedies provided for in this chapter for the removal of a public nuisance, debar a person from instituting a civil suit to abate such nuisance where he suffers special damage thereby.[4]

A person who is not a party to the proceedings under this chapter and who is dispossessed under colour of an order passed in such proceedings can bring an ejectment suit in a Civil Court on the basis of such dispossession.[4-a]

Independent of this section a Magistrate acting judicially is, under S. 1 of the Judicial Officer's Protection Act (XVIII of 1850), not liable to be sued in a Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in good faith in the discharge of his judicial duty.[5]

523. * * * * * * * * *

When order may be made absolute.

If the applicant by neglect or otherwise prevents, or if he does not claim, the appointment of a jury, or if from any cause the jury so appointed do not decide and report within a reasonable time, the Magistrate may pass such order as he thinks proper, which order shall be carried out in the manner hereinafter provided.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 310.)

310. The person to whom such order is issued shall be bound, within the time specified in the order, to obey the same or to appear before the Magistrate to show cause as aforesaid, or he may apply to the Magistrate by petition for an order for a jury to be appointed to try whether the order is reasonable and proper.

Person ordered shall obey the order, or may claim a jury.

On receiving such petition, the Magistrate shall forthwith appoint a jury which shall consist of not less than five persons whereof the President and one-half of the members shall be nominated by such Magistrate, and the remaining members by the party petitioning. The Magistrate shall suspend the execution of the order pending such enquiry, and be guided by the decision of the jury, which shall be according to the opinion of the majority.

Constitution of jury.

Proceeding in case of neglect by jury.

If the petitioner shall, by neglect or in any other way, prevent the appointment of a jury, or if from any cause the jury so appointed shall not decide and report within a reasonable time to be fixed in the order for the appointment, their functions shall cease from the date of the expiration of such period, unless they be continued by special order of the Magistrate, and if from any of the above causes no decision be made by the jury, the order of the Magistrate shall be carried into effect as hereinafter provided.

S. 141, Notes 1—3.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Difference between the Code of 1861 and that of 1872—

It was expressly provided in the Code of 1861 that the time within which the jury were to report, should be fixed in the order of appointment and that the Magistrate was empowered to extend the time by means of a "Special order". S. 523 of the Code of 1872 did not provide for the fixing of such period, but the jury had to decide and report "within a reasonable time."

(2) Difference between the Code of 1872 and those of 1882 and 1898—

The Code of 1882. provided for the fixing of a time for the decision of the jury and for extending the time when necessary. This provision is repeated in the present Code.

2. "Within such further time as the Magistrate, may, in his direction allow".—Where a reasonable application is made for extension of time the Court should grant it.[1] Where it so grants further time it should fix the date by which the verdict is to be returned. It was held in the undermentioned case decided under S. 310 of the Code of 1861, that the fixing of a time for the return of the verdict is a condition precedent to the exercise by the Magistrate of the power to decide the case himself and that where the Magistrate granted further time, directing the jury to report "as soon as possible", without fixing a time, and passed an order before the receipt of the report, it was held that the order was illegal and contrary to law.[2]

Where an application is made for extension of time for return of the verdict, it should be disposed of before any further proceedings are taken in the matter. No proceedings taken before it is so disposed of will be valid.[3]

3. "The Magistrate may pass order as he thinks fit".—The words "may pass such order as he thinks fit" show that the Court has discretion as to what order should be passed in the matter. The discretion however is a judicial one to be exercised on considerations of justice and equity.[1] Thus where, owing to no fault of person proceeded against, the jury perversly refuse to act or fail to return their verdict within the time fixed therefor, the Court may on a proper application by the party concerned appoint a fresh jury[2] or allow him to show cause by evidence against the conditional order as he could have done originally under S. 135, ante.[3] Even if there is no application, the Magistrate cannot straightaway make the order absolute without any attempt to investigate the rights and circumstances which surround the affair; the words "pass such order as he thinks fit" must mean that if the jury for any reason does not return his verdict the Magistrate must inquire into the matter before he passes an order.[4] Where a jury failed to return a verdict within the time allowed, whereupon the Court gave the parties an opportunity to adduce evidence and, on their failure to do so, inspected the locality and made the order absolute, it was held that the procedure adopted was quite proper.[5] S. 141, Note 3.

The words "pending the enquiry by a jury" were replaced by the words "whether a jury is to be or has been appointed or not".

(2) Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The words "who issued the order" and "to whom the order under S. 521 was issued," in S. 528 of the Code of 1872 were omitted and the words "making an order under S. 133" and "to the person against whom the order was made" were substituted.

(3) Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

The words "pending determination of the matter" have been newly added at the end of clause (1).

2. Injunction—When can be issued and executed.—Under S. 314 of 1861 an injunction could be issued only "pending the enquiry by a jury" and hence where the Magistrate had not appointed a jury, though asked to do so, the order of injunction was held to be irregular and set aside.[1] This is no longer law in view of the change in the wording of the section. Vide Note 1.

1. Scope.—This section contemplates that where a nuisance has been ascertained to be a 'public nuisance' after a trial under the foregoing provisions the Magistrate empowered in that behalf may prohibit its repetition.[1] A summary order under this section should not be passed without giving the party affected an opportunity to defend himself.[1-a] The Magistrate cannot prohibit what was lawful before his order and thereby make such a legal act punishable under the Indian Penal Code.[2] S. 291 of the Indian Penal Code provides the punishment for disobedience of an order under this section.

2. 'May order any person'.—The order under this section must be addressed to a particular person in the form prescribed in Sch. V, Form No. 20. Unless such an order is served on an individual he would not render himself liable under S. 291 of the Penal Code.[1] such Magistrate may, by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in manner provided by section 134, direct any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession, or under his management, if such Magistrate considers that such direction is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent, obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any person lawfully employed, or danger to human life, health or safety, or a riot or an affray.

An order under this section may, in cases of emergency or in cases where the circumstances do not admit of the serving in due time of a notice upon the person against whom the order is directed, be passed ex parte.

An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place.

Any Magistrate may rescind or alter any order made under this section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor in office.

No order under this section shall remain in force for more than two months from the making thereof; unless, in cases of danger to human life, health or safety, or a likelihood of a riot or an affray, the Local Government, by notification in the official Gazette, otherwise directs.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

LOCAL NUISANCES.

518. A Magistrate of the District, or a Magistrate of a Division of a District, or any Magistrate specially empowered may, by written order, direct any person to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession, or under his management, whenever such Magistrate considers that such direction is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent,

Magistrate may issue orders to prevent obstructions, danger to human life, or riots.

obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any persons lawfully employed, or danger to human life, health or safety, or a riot or an affray.

Explanation I.—This section is intended to provide for cases where a speedy remedy is desirable, and where the delay which would be occasioned by a resort to the procedure contained in section 521 and the next following sections would, in the opinion of the Magistrate, occasion a greater evil than that suffered by the person upon whom the order was made, or would defeat the intention of this chapter.

Explanation II.—An order may, in cases of emergency or in cases where the circumstances do not admit of the serving of notice, be passed ex parte, and may in all cases be made upon such information as satisfies the Magistrate.

Explanation III.—An order may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place.

Explanation IV.—Any Magistrate may recall or alter any order made under this section by himself or by his predecessor in the same office.

(6) No order under this section shall remain in force for more than two months from the making thereof; unless, in cases of danger to human life, health or safety, or a likelihood of a riot or an affray, the Local Government, by notification in the Official Gazette, otherwise directs. S. 144.

1. Scope of the section.—This section provides for temporary orders being passed in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger. Two conditions are necessary to be satisfied before a Magistrate can act under this section.

(1) The Magistrate must be satisfied that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary.[1] It is in fact, the urgency of the case that vests the Magistrate with jurisdiction to exercise the powers conferred by this section.[2] A mere statement that he considers the case to be urgent is not sufficient if the facts show that, in reality, there is no urgent necessity for action.[3]

(2) The Magistrate must be satisfied that the direction to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with property is likely to prevent or tends to prevent obstruction, etc., as specified in the section.[4]

Injury to property as distinguished from injury to person or danger to human life is not one of the objects for the prevention of which order can be passed under this section.[4-a]

The power conferred by this section is a discretionary one and being large and extraordinary, should be used sparingly and only where all the conditions prescribed are strictly fulfilled.[5]

Where the Magistrate has satisfied himself as to the existence of the conditions necessary for taking action under the section, he should pass a written order stating the material facts therein.[6]

The section does not empower a Magistrate to decide disputes of a civil nature between private individuals and thereby usurp the functions of a Civil

Court which alone has jurisdiction to decide such disputes.[7] It is not within the province of a Magistrate acting under this section to adjudicate upon questions of title or possession,[8] although for the purposes of passing a proper and reasonable order he can take into consideration the nature of the claims set up by the parties in order to see whether or not it is possible to afford protection to those who seek only the lawful exercise of any legal and natural rights.[9] The Magistrate cannot also question the legality or propriety of a Civil Court's decree nor interfere with the execution of a Civil Court decree.[10] He is bound to respect the findings and directions given by a Civil Court.[11] Where the party applying has a proper and appropriate remedy in a Civil Court, the Criminal Court should not assume jurisdiction under this section.[12] Thus where there was a bona fide dispute as regards the possession and management of a temple between two persons, one claiming to be a hereditary trustee and the other claiming to be a trustee appointed by the Hindu Religious Endowments Board, it was held that it was not a case for interference under this section and that the proper remedy was to apply to the Civil Court.[13] It is not also permissible for a Magistrate under cover of an order under this section to dispossess a particular individual from certain property or to direct delivery of possession of the property where the object of the order is not to prevent obstruction, annoyance, or injury to any person lawfully employed.[14] Where the matter is likely to be decided by the Civil Court shortly and there is no apprehension of any imminent breach of the peace, there is also no necessity for action under this section.[15]

2. Section 144 and Ss. 145 and 107 compared.—This section is a larger and more general section than S. 145 which is limited in scope and applies only to cases of disputes relating to land or water, where there is a danger of the breach of the peace. Again this is discretionary while S. 145 is mandatory. The latter section further provides for a thorough enquiry into the disputes as to possession of the parties which tends to a breach of the peace.[1]

Ordinarily when there is a dispute relating to the possession of land or water and there is no emergency, action should be taken under S. 145, which would in a proper inquiry determine once for all the right to possession of either party claiming the property in dispute.[2] The provisions of this section should not be resorted to in such cases and an enquiry into possession thus evaded.[3] Where however there is in reality no dispute as to possession of land or water, as for instance, where it is clear upon the materials before a Magistrate that one party is in actual possession and that another whose claim to possession is a mere pretence is threatening to interfere with that possession the Magistrate is clearly entitled to resort to the special and summary procedure under this section provided the conditions prescribed by this section are fulfilled.[4] Similarly, where the Civil Court has put one of the parties in possession there is in law no dispute as to possession and action under this section is justified in such cases.[5]

It has been held in a number of cases[6] that where the Magistrate finds that there is a bona fide dispute relating to the possession of land or water, he should take action under S. 145 and not under this section; and that even in cases where he takes action under this section he should convert the proceedings into one under S. 145.[7] This however is only a rule of propriety and convenience, and does not affect the question of jurisdiction of a Magistrate to act under this section, for there is nothing in S. 144 to oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate in cases of bona fide disputes as to possession. In cases of emergency where immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable and there are sufficient grounds for proceeding under this section a Magistrate can take action under this section even though there is a dispute or even a bona fide dispute relating to possession.[8] Thus, where there are crops on the land which if not harvested by the party in actual possession would be ruined, and there is a likelihood of a riot or an affray it has been held, that the Magistrate is justified in passing an order under this section restraining the opposite party from interfering with the harvest of crops even though there is a bona fide dispute as to the possession of the land.[9]

It has been held that where the Magistrate finds one of the rival parties in actual possession of the land and there is a likelihood of the breach of the peace, he has a discretion to proceed either under S. 144 or S. 145 or S. 107.[10] Except in cases where the exclusive possession of one of the parties is undisputed or admitted or is concluded by some decisions of a competent Court, it has been held, that the Magistrate cannot pass a final order under either of these sections without an enquiry into possession. Where as a result of the enquiry, the Magistrate finds possession is not exclusive with one party but both parties have a joint right to possession the proper course is to bind over both the parties under S. 107 in order to avert a breach of the peace. Where however the Magistrate finds exclusive possession with one party then he can restrain the other party by an order under this section or S. 145. Where the question of possession is disputed and the case is one of emergency, the proper course is to pass a temporary order under this section and then to institute an enquiry into possession, or straightaway take the proceedings under S. 145 by attaching the property in dispute.[11] Where owing to ill-feelings prevailing between certain persons likely to attend a meeting a breach of the peace was expected, it was held that the Magistrate should proceed under this section and not institute proceedings under S. 107 and arrest the persons.[12]

Where a breach of peace is apprehended as a consequence of a person exercising his legal rights the proper course is to bind over the person likely to cause the breach of peace, under S. 107, and not to restrain under this section the person seeking to exercise his legal rights.[12-a]

When a Magistrate has several courses open to him to meet the emergency before him and he adopts any of these courses, the propriety of his action is not to be judged in the light of the fact that at a later stage when the emergency can be viewed on a different basis it may be considered that another course might have been followed more properly.[12-b]

of private individuals, and therefore the authority of a Magistrate under this section should ordinarily be exercised in defence of such rights rather than in their suppression.[1] But the powers under this section are not confined to the protection of the private rights, they are intended to be exercised also for the protection of the public including private individuals and for the preservation of the public tranquillity.[2] The preservation of the public peace is a paramount function of the Government, and in the performance of such function it may be necessary to override temporarily private rights. Where there is a conflict between public interest and private interest, the former must prevail and a Magistrate can under this section override temporarily private rights although such rights have been declared or upheld by a Civil Court.[3] Thus, although a person has an absolute right to use his property as he pleases, yet if the mode of enjoyment of the property, innocent and lawful as it may be, results or tends to result in a breach of the public peace the Magistrate has power to restrain him temporarily from so using the property.[4] In such a case regard for the public welfare is allowed to override temporarily the private right and the Magistrate is authorised to interdict its exercise.[4a]

An order in suppression of legal rights ought not, however, to be made unless the Magistrate considers that such action is absolutely necessary and that the powers vested in him under the other provisions of the Code to avert a breach of the peace are not likely to prove adequate or sufficient.[5] The Magistrate should try as far as possible to uphold the rights declared by Civil Courts[5a] and should resort to the provisions of this section only when there is no time or opportunity for any other course.[6] An order under this section, if made, should never be disproportionate but should always be commensurate to the emergencies of any particular situation[7] and it is incumbent on the Magistrate to hold a full and sufficient enquiry as to the circumstances which make it likely that a breach of the peace will occur.[8] The authority of the Magistrate to override temporarily private rights in cases of emergency is co-extensive with the emergency and when it ceases he should secure to every person the enjoyment of his legal rights and by means of proper precautions deter those who seek to invade the rights of others.[9]

Where however there is no apprehension of a breach of the public peace a Magistrate should not restrain the liberty of a private individual by means of an order under this section. Thus where it is found that a person is doing a thing which he is legally entitled to do and his neighbour chooses to take offence and threatens to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clearly the duty of the Magistrate not to deprive the former of the exercise of the legal rights but restrain the latter from illegally interfering with the exercise of such legal rights.[10] Where, A, mutwalli of a mosque appointed one H as leader of prayers in the mosque and most of the members of the congregation were dissatisfied with the appointment of H, and the Magistrate directed that no person of either party should be allowed to read the prayers in the mosque, it was held that the order was misconceived and that the proper course for the Magistrate was to ascertain which party was in the wrong and was interfering unnecessarily with the legal exercise of the rights of the other party and to restrain that party from committing any act which may lead to a breach of the peace.[11]

When a breach of the peace is anticipated, action is to be taken against the potential law-breakers and not against the peaceful citizens whom it is expected that the law-breakers will molest.[12]

4. "Written order stating the material facts".—Where the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for proceeding under this section and that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, he should pass a preliminary order stating the material facts of the case[1] and such order should be a written order.[2] Before a Magistrate passes such an order there ought to be evidence or information before the Magistrate that the act prohibited is likely to cause a riot or affray or danger to human life, etc.[3] The information may, however, be oral[4] or may be in a police report.[5] But a Magistrate cannot act solely on the report of an interested person, as for instance, the manager of the factory in which the accused persons are employed.[6]

The order should be served upon the persons proceeded against in the manner provided for by S. 134 of the Code.[7] The notice issued to the party must follow the terms of the order in pursuance of which it is issued.[7-a]

It is desirable that the order should show in clear and unmistakeable terms the authority under which the Magistrate takes action under this section and professes to act.[8]

An order under the section should be clear and definite.[8-a]

Omission to state material facts in the order—Effect of.—It has been held that a mere omission to set out in the order the material facts, where there are as a matter of fact grounds justifying the order, will not justify interference with the order.[9] But where there are no such materials[10] and the order does not show any emergency[11] it has been held that the order is one passed without jurisdiction, and can be set aside.

4-A. Who can pass order under section.—Where a Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom an application had been made for an order under this section fixed a certain day for enquiring into the necessity for the order but did not attend Court on that day it was held that another Magistrate who was in charge of the current file of his Court and who was not otherwise disqualified to pass an order under the section could dispose of the matter and pass orders thereon.[1]

5. Nature of orders that can be passed under the section.—The section contemplates two kinds of orders:—

(1) Order directing a person to abstain from a certain act (See Note 6, infra) and

(2) Order directing a person to take certain order with property in his possession or management (See Note 7, infra).

6. Order to abstain from certain acts.—An order of this description in order to be valid should fulfil the following requirements:—

S. 144, Note 6.

(i) The order should be addressed to a definite person.—Thus an order addressed to the crews, lessees, proprietors or any other persons having control over the movements of boats regulating the boat traffic at a certain landing,[1] or an order forbidding the "owners of cattle" from allowing their animals to stray,[2] or an order directing a person not to go to a certain village or allow "any of his servants, relations, or friends" to go there,[3] has been held to be indefinite and not authorized by the section. Similarly, an order addressed to "A.B. and all other persons who may be concerned in the project" is vague and bad in Law.[3-a]

(ii) The order should be addressed to a party to the proceedings and not to a third person.—On this principle, it has been held that an order directing a village munsif to take possession of the property in dispute[4] or directing the police to see that a person is allowed to go to a particular land and cut the crops[5] is ultra vires.

(iii) The act prohibited should be a certain and definite act.—On this ground the following orders have been held to be not valid:—

(1) An order directing a person not to do any illegal act that is likely to cause a breach of the peace.[6]

(2) An order directing a person not to collect rents from the ryots generally without mentioning any particular ryot.[7]

(3) An order in general terms forbidding two persons to use any musical instrument in the neighbourhood of each other's house.[8]

(4) An order directing certain persons not to commit any act that may be likely to induce a breach of the peace and not to take forcible possession of certain property.[9]

(5) An order intimating that the tenants will be liable for a patwari cess.[10]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[11] that an order should direct a person to abstain from a certain act and not a series of acts done at certain intervals and spreading over a period of time.

(iv) The order should be to abstain from a certain act and not to do a certain act.—The section permits only a restrictive order and does not authorize a Magistrate to make a mandatory or positive order directing a person to do a particular act.[12] Thus it has been held that the Magistrate has no power to pass the following orders:—

directing him to remove himself from such place and hence is not warranted by the section.[26-b]

S. 144, Note 6.

(v) The object of the order should be one of those specified in sub-section.—An order under this section ought not to be passed on the mere ground that pecuniary loss would be caused to one party.[27] Thus an order preventing the ryots from reaping the crops they have sown owing to an apprehension that if they are allowed to reap them, the Government or other landlord might lose rent, is not justified.[28] Similarly the loss arising from the establishment of a rival hat is not an injury within the meaning of the section.[29] An order cannot also be passed for the mere protection of one's own property. Thus, an order directing the removal of a certain dam obstructing flood is not competent.[30]

An act prohibited under the section must only be so prohibited if it is likely to prevent obstruction, annoyance, etc., and this likelihood or tendency must be a reasonable or proximate one. It is not enough to say that by stretching several possibilities one after the other that it is possible to establish a connection of cause and effect between the act prohibited and likelihood of a disturbance of the public tranquillity. Thus an order prohibiting the public from wearing Gandhi caps in the absence of any evidence to show that it was necessary to pass such an order in the interests of the public peace was set aside by the Madras High Court.[31]

The word "annoyance" in the section has been held to include mental as well as physical annoyance.[31-a]

The following orders have been held to be competent and valid under this section as being orders to abstain from certain acts:—

(1) An order directing a person to abstain from interfering with a certain mutt and the property appertaining to it.[32]

(2) An order directing a person not to interfere with the management of a certain temple.[33]

(3) An order directing a trustee requiring him to abstain from, in any way, interfering with the conduct of the adayapakam service in a temple.[34]

(5) An order directing a particular time to be observed by the Hanafi and Shafi sects for daily worship in a mosque and directing either sect to abstain from worshipping during the time fixed for the other.[36]

(6) An order prohibiting the slaughter of votive animals except in the slaughter house in order to prevent a breach of the peace between Hindus and Muhammadans.[37]

(7) An order directing a person to refrain from interfering with the crops on the land.[38]

(8) An order directing the Melvaramdar to abstain from exercising his rights as Melvaramdar.[39]

7. Direction to take certain order with property.—The word "property" refers only to and is restricted to immovable property and the Magistrate cannot make an order with regard to the custody of moveable property, such as money, on the ground that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace with regard to the same.[1] Further an order of this description should relate to an interference of some kind to the property itself.[2]

The property in respect of which the order is made should be in the possession or management of the person restrained by the order. Thus the section does not apply to a subletting owner not in actual possession or management of the property.[3]

The section does not however authorise the attachment of properties.[4] Nor can the Magistrate direct that a list be prepared of articles concerning which the parties are in dispute and that the same should be removed to the Court and should remain there for two months or until the decision of a pending civil suit.[5]

A common class of cases relating to property in respect of which action is sought for under this clause are Hat disputes or disputes relating to the holding of a market. Every person is ordinarily entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his property and the holding of a Hat on one's own property in the exercise of such a right is not per se a wrongful act. The law as regards the preservation of the public peace is based upon an apprehension that either a certain person or certain persons are likely to commit a breach of the peace by their own acts or that they are likely to do wrongful acts which may occasion other people to commit a breach of the peace and there is a clear distinction between interfering with the rights of private proprietors with whatever ulterior motives they may do acts which they have a right to do and the perpetration of wrongful acts by such proprietors. Hence it has been held that a Magistrate cannot restrain a person under this section from holding a

Hat altogether on his land.[6] In India the right to hold a market cannot be conferred by grant from the Crown or acquired by prescription and the proprietor of an old Hat has therefore no monopoly or privilege which is entitled to protection and immunity from competition.[7] Where a breach of the peace is anticipated in such cases the proper course, is to take action under S. 107 and to bind over both the parties.[8] Although it is not open to a Magistrate to restrain a person altogether from holding a Hat on his property he can where there is a likelihood of a breach of public peace, impose restrictions as to the holding of Hats by, for instance, directing him not to hold it on certain specific days in the week.[9] But he cannot direct that a person should hold his Hat, only on a particular day and not on other days. Such an order is not within the scope of the section.[10]

8. Effect of order under the section.—An order under this section has not the effect of disturbing either title or possession, though it may prevent and does prevent the exercise of the rights which a person in possession would otherwise be entitled to exercise, during the continuance of the said order.[1] Nor can the order be treated as substantive evidence of possession in subsequent proceedings.[2] Where the Magistrate, while passing an order under this section makes an incidental observation as to possession of a certain property, the observation cannot have the force or effect of an order under S. 145.[3]

An order under this section does not bind a person who was not a party to the proceedings under it.[4]

9. Ex parte order—Sub-S. (2).—It is permissible for a Magistrate to pass an ex parte order under this section but that can be done only in cases of emergency[1] or where the circumstances of the case are such that they do not admit of the serving in due time of a notice upon the person against whom the order is passed.[2] Thus the Magistrate can pass an ex parte order immediately on the receipt of a police report where he is satisfied therefrom that immediate action is necessary[3] or where he apprehends that unless immediate action is taken, he cannot with the force at his disposal prevent a breach of the peace.[4] He should, however, in such cases record his reasons for considering the occasion to be one of emergency and the materials on which he considered immediate-action necessary[5] where the record does not show that either of the two conditions justifying an ex parte order exists, the order is liable to be set aside.[6]

It is open to a person aggrieved by an ex parte order under this sub-section to apply under sub-S. (4) to rescind or alter the order.[7] Where the legality and propriety of an ex parte order is challenged, it is not proper to postpone the hearing until about the termination of the order; such matters ought to be disposed of quickly in order to avoid unnecessarily encroaching on the civil rights and liberties of the subject.[8]

10. Order against the general public—Sub-S. (3).—A Magistrate has no power, under the section to pass an order directed against the general public simpliciter.[1] The order can only be directed to the general public when frequenting or visiting a particular place.[2] The expression "particular place" implies that the place to which the restriction applies should be sufficiently particularised, i.e., specified in the order, so that the public might feel no vagueness or uncertainty about it. It has not so much to do with the area of the place as to its description. Whether a place is properly particularised or not would depend upon its description in the order but the mere mention of a municipal unit cannot be regarded as sufficient specification for a penal provision. The area and boundaries of such a unit may shift from time to time and the general public will have only a vague and rough idea as to their outlines. Hence, the mere reference to a municipal town or a municipal ward without any further description cannot be regarded as sufficient. But the expression "particular place" need not be confined to a restricted area such as a park or market but may also apply to a municipal town or municipal ward provided that the boundaries of the area to which the order is intended to relate are clearly defined therein so that the general public may be reasonably expected to know what they are.[2-a] A Magistrate can thus validly issue a general order directing that no person should sacrifice or cause to be sacrificed any cow or bullock within a specified boundary.[3] Similarly, an order directed against all and sundry persons attending the Audinatha Swami temple on the occasion of the Vaikasi festival is valid.[4] But an order directing the public to refrain from taking "Prabhat Pheris" (morning processions) in the city and cantonment of Belgaum[5] or prohibiting the taking part in any processions within the Municipal limits of Erandol city and all public places within such limits, was held to be too wide and did not conform to the requirements of the section.[6] So also, an order prohibiting meetings to be held in any "place of public resort" in a city is much too vague to come within the terms of the section.[6-a] But an order directed to the public when frequenting public streets in a particular city was held to be sufficiently definite as to place to comply with the requirements of this section.[6-b]

It is essential that the "particular place" should be one which is frequented or visited by the public or in other words, the place must be one which is open to the public as such. Hence it has been held that the public cannot be prohibited from putting up national flags in a private house not frequented by the public.[7] Similarly where an order under this section forbade the public in general to give caste dinners in the city owing to the prevalence of cholera and a dinner was given in a private house to about four hundred or five hundred persons, it was held that the conviction for disobedience of the order was illegal.[8]

It has been held that an order under this section cannot be made until it is shown that the public actually attend or frequent the particular place. Thus an order directing the public to abstain from attending a hat was held to be bad since it was not until the public attended the hat that the order could be binding on them.[9]

Where an order was addressed to a portion of the community and had no concern with the public generally frequenting or visiting a particular place, and there was also nothing to show that the Magistrate considered that immediate action was necessary it was held that the order was not competent under the section.[10] Where an order under this section is directed neither to a particular individual nor to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place, the order is one made without jurisdiction.[11]

11. Rescission or alteration of order—Sub-S. (4).—An order under this section is liable under sub-S. (4) to be rescinded or altered on cause being shown. The jurisdiction conferred by that sub-section is however, not appellate or revisional, but is a special one whereunder the Magistrate is empowered to rescind or alter the original order,[1] but not substitute an entirely new order of his own. Thus, where the Deputy Magistrate prohibits the second party from doing a certain act, the District Magistrate could not substitute a new order forbiding the first party from doing the act.[2] Similarly, a District Magistrate cannot under this sub-section, prohibit the counter-petitioners from doing a certain act which they were permitted to do by the order passed by the Subordinate Magistrate. The word "alter", it has been observed, cannot mean the substitution of the names of one party for the other. The sub-section contemplates only a change in the nature of the order and not a change in the party against whom it has been made.[3] On the same principle, it has been held that the District Magistrate cannot, while setting aside an order under this section direct that proceedings under S. 145 should be drawn up,[4] although there is nothing improper in his merely suggesting such a course for the guidance of the Subordinate Magistrate.[5]

A rescission or alteration under the sub-section is justified where the reasons for the order no longer exist, or has varied in such a manner as to make an alteration a necessary corollary, or where the order is one that ought not to have been made.[6]

The mere fact that a Magistrate is interested in the matter to which the order under the section relates does not disqualify him from exercising his powers under this sub-section.[6-a]

The section contemplates the passing of only one order rescinding or altering the original order and not intermediate or interlocutory orders pending final orders.[7]

"Or by his predecessor in office".—An order passed by the Acting District Magistrate who has subsequently reverted can be altered or rescinded only by the then District Magistrate and the latter cannot therefore transfer an application under this sub-section for disposal by the former.[8]

12. Enquiry into application to rescind or alter the order—Sub-S. (5).—Where the Magistrate acts under this section it is his duty to give an early opportunity to any person or persons aggrieved by his order to show cause against it and to hold an enquiry into the circumstances of the case to see if that order has to be rescinded or altered.[1] He should consider whether the claims advanced by one or other of the parties are within, or in excess of, their legal and natural rights and whether any alterations or restrictions to the order already passed are reasonably necessary in order to obviate undue hardship to one or other of the parties and to see that protection is given to the persons who act within the bounds of their legal and natural rights without being molested by the breakers of law, having at the same time due regard to the paramount necessity of preserving public tranquillity.[2] S. 144, Notes 12—14.

An enquiry under the section is a judicial enquiry[3] and the Magistrate is bound to take evidence in the usual way by examination and cross-examination of witnesses.[4] He is bound to consider the evidence and arguments submitted to him and cannot act solely on the evidence recorded by him ex parte and behind the back of the parties.[5] The accused is also entitled to a copy of the information upon which the Magistrate acted to enable him to show that it is unfounded or insufficient.[6]

It has been observed in the case cited below[7] that a Magistrate can depute another Magistrate subordinate to him to hold an enquiry but that he must come to his own independent conclusion on the materials as to the necessity for action under the section.

13. Proceedings are judicial.—As already seen in Note 12, supra, the proceedings under this section are judicial. A person who applies to a Magistrate for an order under this section institutes criminal proceedings against that person within the meaning of S. 211 of the Penal Code.[1]

14. Duration of the order—Sub-S. (6).—An order under the section can remain in force only for two months from the date of such order. It should not be in its nature irrevocable and must be such that can be recalled at the expiry of two months.[1] The section does not authorise a Magistrate to pass an order the effect of which would be the granting of a perpetual injunction.[2] Thus, an order prohibiting the rival disputants from collecting rent until such time as the rights of both the parties are established by a competent Court,[3] or directing a person to abstain from taking any part in the management of a temple until another person should be evicted from the management in due course of law[4] is illegal and without jurisdiction. The section does not also authorize a Magistrate to enlarge the duration of the order beyond the period of two months by passing successive orders or renewing the order at the end of every two months. Such a procedure is illegal and amounts to an evasion of the law.[5] Where an order does not prove sufficient for the purpose, the proper course is to take action under S. 107[6] or move the Local Government to extend the duration of the order.[7] The Local Government unlike a Magistrate, is empowered under the section to extend the duration of the order even for an indefinite period as for instance that it should remain in force until cancelled by a notification in the official Gazette. It is not necessary that the Local Government should state the reasons for extending the duration of the order.[8]

The order of the Magistrate remains in force for two months from the date of the making of the order and not from the date of the confirmation of the order on a subsequent date.[9]

It is not necessary that an order under this section should state expressly that its operation is confined to two months or some shorter period.[10]

15. Revision.—Under the Code of 1861, it was held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta,[1] that the proceedings under S. 62 of that Code (corresponding to the present section) were not judicial proceedings and therefore not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 404 (now 435). Under the Code of 1872 the Legislature obviously with a view to give effect to the aforesaid Full Bench decision enacted a new provision in S. 520 of that Code which expressly declared that proceedings under S. 518 (now 144) were not judicial proceedings, and consequently it was held that the High Court's powers of revision were excluded.[2] Under the Codes of 1882 and 1898

(2) (1881) 3 Mad. 354 (357), E. V. R. Jeeyarswami v. V. R. Jeeyar.

S. 520 of the 1872 Code was omitted by the Legislature, but a new sub-S. (3) was added to S. 435 which declared that orders under S. 144 were not proceedings within the meaning of S. 435. The effect of this change was also to exclude the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.[3] Although the Old Codes thus forbade revision, it was held that the High Court could, by virtue of its powers of superintendence under S. 15 of the Charter Act (S. 107 of the Government of India Act) interfere with the orders of Magistrates under this section where they were in excess of jurisdiction or resulted in grave miscarriage of justice.[4] S. 144, Note 15.

Under the present Code as amended in 1923 the legislature has omitted sub-S. (3) to S. 435, and there is also no corresponding provision as in S. 520 of the Code of 1872. The effect of this change is that the ban which has been placed on the High Court's powers of revision by the Legislature from 1872 to 1923 with regard to orders under this section has been removed, and that such orders are now subject to revision under S. 435.[5] The provisions of sub-S. (4) are no bar to the entertainment of a revision application by the High Court Where the order of the Magistrate is one made without jurisdiction the fact that the petitioner has not availed himself of the remedy provided for by sub-S. (4) has been held to be no ground for refusing to interfere in revision.[6]

It is prima facie for the Magistrate who knows the local conditions to say whether an emergency exists or not and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with his findings unless there be clear evidence that no reasonable man could have held that there was an emergency.[7] Where the elements necessary for action under the section are shown to exist upon materials legally before the Court the High Court will, in exercising its powers, respect the opinion of the local authorities as to the gravity of the danger and as to the steps necessary for the maintenance of the peace.[8]

The High Court will interfere in revision in the following cases:—

(a) Where there are no materials justifying the issue of order.[9]

(b) Where the grounds of action as stated in the order are either unfounded in fact or insufficient in law[10] or where it is shown that the order violates the conditions laid down by the section.[11]

(c) Where the order is beyond the scope of the section[12] as for instance when it purports to decide the rights of parties which is not necessary for the order.[12-a]

(d) Where the order is passed without preliminary notice to the persons proceeded against and without hearing them.[13]

(e) Where the order is based upon no legal evidence.[14]

Where the order of the Magistrate has spent itself, or in other words the two months' period has elapsed at the time of revision, the High Court will not generally interfere in revision[15] save in exceptional cases[15-a] involving questions of jurisdiction[16] or where the party against whom the order was passed

16. Disobedience of order under the section.—A person disobeying an order under this section is liable to be punished under S. 188 of the Penal Code. The prosecution in such a case has to be launched under the provisions of S. 195 or S. 476 of the Code.[1]

In order to punish a person under S. 188, I.P.C., the following conditions should be fulfilled:—

(1) The order under this section should be a valid order. Where the order is one not warranted by the section, or the requirements of the section are not duly complied with a prosecution cannot stand.[2] The legality of the order is liable to be questioned in proceedings under S. 188, I.P.Code.[3]

(2) The accused should be proved to have had actual knowledge of the order. The knowledge cannot be presumed.[4]

(3) The accused should be proved to have disobeyed the order[5] and that too at the time of the continuance of the order.[6]

(4) The disobedience should have caused or tended to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury or the risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed or danger to human life, health, safety, or riot or an affray.[7]

S. 144, Notes 16—17.

Parties are entitled to resist the execution of an order under this section which is ultra vires and no offence would be constituted by such resistance provided the limits of the right of private defence are not exceeded.[8]

17. Suit to establish civil rights infringed by an order under this section.—An order of a Magistrate under this section which interferes with the legal rights of a person furnishes that person with a cause of action to file a suit in a Civil Court for the establishment of such rights. The existence of the order is no bar to the maintainability of such a suit.[1]

Thus where an order under this section forbids a person or a body of persons from using a highway for the purpose of procession, it furnishes that person or persons with a cause of action for bringing declaratory suit for the establishment of that right where it is alleged to be an infringement of legal right, although such order is intra vires. No proof of special damage is necessary to succeed in such an action.[2] Similarly where the order of the Magistrate was that all music should cease when any procession is passing a place of worship (a mosque), it was held that a suit lies to declare the right to take procession with music.[3]

The Civil Court has no power to cancel or set aside such an order in a suit to which the Government is not a party; the proper way to question or set aside such an order is by a revision petition to the High Court. However as already seen the existence of the order is no bar to the Civil Court's adjudicating upon the rights of the parties which are infringed by the order and where the Civil Court declares the rights it is open to the parties to approach the Local Government to modify or cancel the order in the light of the Civil Court's declaration.[4]

CHAPTER XII.

DISPUTES AS TO IMMOVABLE PROPERTY.

145.* (1) Whenever a District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is satisfied from a police-report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof, within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he shall make an order in writing, stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court in person or by pleader, within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.

Procedure where dispute concerning land, etc., is likely to cause breach of peace.

(2) For the purposes of this section the expression "land or water" includes buildings, markets, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, and the rents or profits of any such property.

(3) A copy of the order shall be served in manner provided by this Code for the service of a summons upon such person or persons as the Magistrate may direct, and at least one copy shall be published by being affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute.

(4) The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties,

Inquiry as to possession.

(7) Proceedings under this section shall not abate by reason only of the death of any of the parties thereto.

(7) When any party to any such proceeding dies, the Magistrate may cause the legal representative of the deceased party to be made a party to the proceeding, and shall thereupon continue the inquiry, and if any question arises as to who the legal representative of a deceased party for the purpose of such proceeding is, all persons claiming to be representatives of the deceased party shall be made parties thereto.

(8) If the Magistrate is of opinion that any crop or other produce of the property, the subject of dispute in a proceeding under this section pending before him, is subject to speedy and natural decay, he may make an order for the proper custody or sale of such property, and, upon the completion of the inquiry, shall make such order for the disposal of such property, or the sale-proceeds thereof, as he thinks fit.

(9) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, at any stage of the proceedings under this section, on the application of either party, issue summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or thing.

(10) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to be in derogation of the powers of the Magistrate to proceed under section 107.

The Magistrate shall then, without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statement so put in, hear the parties, receive the evidence produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary, and, if possible, decide whether any and which of the parties is then in such possession of the said subject.

Enquiry as to possession.

If the Magistrate decides that one of the parties is then in such possession of the said subject, he shall issue an order declaring such party to be entitled to retain possession thereof until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction.

Party in possession to retain possession until legally evicted.

Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed; and in such case the Magistrate shall cancel his said order, and all further proceedings thereon shall be stayed.

CHAPTER XL.

POSSESSION.

530. Whenever the Magistrate of the District or a Magistrate of a Division of a District, or Magistrate of the first class, is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or the boundaries of any land, or concerning any houses, water, fisheries, crops or other produce of land, within the limits of his jurisdiction, Magistrate how to proceed if any dispute concerning land, etc., is likely to cause breach of the peace.

such Magistrate shall record a proceeding stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and shall call on all parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court, in person or by agent, within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to give in a written statement of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.

Such Magistrate shall, without reference to the merits of the claims of any party to a right of possession, proceed to inquire and decide which party is in possession of the subject of dispute.

Party in possession to be continued until ousted by due course of law.

After satisfying himself upon that point, he shall issue an order declaring the party or parties to be entitled to retain possession until ousted by due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of possession until such time.

Explanation.—Such Magistrate may satisfy himself of the existence of a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace from a report or other information; but the question of possession must be decided on evidence taken before him.

1. History of the section.—Legislation concerning disputes likely to cause a breach of peace, and relating to immovable property began with Reg. XLIX of 1793. The object of such legislation was the prevention of a breach of the peace and the method was to bring before the Court the disputing parties, to ascertain who was in possession, and to constitute him the custodian of the property until the rights of the parties are effectively determined by the proper tribunal. The object and the method have remained the same throughout in all the subsequent legislations—only, the jurisdiction in such matters which originally was vested in the Court of the Dewanny Adalat by Reg. XLIX of 1793 was, by Reg. XV of 1824, transferred to the Magistrates.[1]

The following are the various legislations that were passed with regard to disputes relating to immovable property:—

(1) Reg. XLIX of 1793.
(2) Reg. VI OF 1813.
(3) Reg. XV of 1824.
(4) Reg. II of 1829.
(5) Act IV of 1840.
(6) Cr. P. Code, XXV of 1861, S. 318.
(7) Do. X of 1872, S. 530.
(8) Do. X of 1882, S. 145.
(9) Do. V of 1898, S. 145.

2. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Changes introduced in 1898—

(a) For the words "Concerning any tangible immovable property" occurring in S. 145 of the Code of 1882 the words "concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof", were substituted. See Note 26, infra.

(b) Sub-Ss. (2) and (3) as also the first proviso to sub-S. (3) were newly added—See Note 46, infra.

(c) Second proviso to sub-S. (3) was also added. See Note 29, infra.

(2) Changes introduced by the amendment of 1923—

(a) In sub-S. (6), the words "or should under the first proviso to sub-S. (4) be treated as being in" and the words "and when

(b) Sub-S. (7) is new and has been substituted for the words ''Proceedings under this section shall not abate by reason only of the death of any of the parties thereto''. See Note 22, infra.

(c) Sub-Ss. (8), (9) and (10) are new. See Notes 31, 33 and 59, infra.

3. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section provides the procedure to be followed where the Magistrate is satisfied that—

(1) a dispute exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof within the local limits of his jurisdiction, and

(2) such dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace.

Where he is so satisfied, the section is imperative that the Magistrate must pass a preliminary order under sub-S. (1) and afterwards make an enquiry under sub-S. (4).[1] The inquiry is, however, limited to the question as to who was in possession in fact on the date of the order, irrespective of the question as to the rights of the parties.[2] A party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months of the date of the order may for this purpose be treated as if he had been in possession on the date of the order. Any party concerned in the dispute may, in such inquiry show that there is no dispute at all or that the dispute is not such as to be likely to cause a breach of the peace. If the Magistrate finds that this is so, he should cancel his preliminary order, inasmuch as the conditions for the applicability of the section are absent.[3] Otherwise the inquiry aforesaid must be held and if the Magistrate is able to decide that one of the disputing parties is in possession on the date of the preliminary order, he should pass a final order declaring that such party is entitled to possession of the property until evicted in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction (sub-S. 6). If he is unable to decide as to who was in possession on the date of the preliminary order he should attach the properties under the next section until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties or the person entitled to the possession of the property.[4]

The primary object of the provision is the prevention of the breach of the public peace arising in respect of a dispute relating to immovable property; in order to achieve the object, the section enables the Magistrate to settle the matter temporarily so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned, and to maintain the status quo until the rights of the parties are decided by a competent Court.[5] The principle on which the section is based is that whether a person has the best or the worst claim in the world he should not take the law into his own hand and disturb the public peace.[6] The result of the proceedings may be to deprive the rightful owner of the possession of his property temporarily and to subject him to other inconveniences, but this and other considerations are necessarily subordinate to the imperative necessity of preserving the peace.[7] S. 145, Notes 3--3-A.

The pendency of a civil suit in respect of the right in question[8] or of proceedings under the Indian Companies Act[9] is no bar to action being taken under this section. But a proceeding under this section being a quasi executive action having for its justification the prevention of the breach of the public peace[10] should be taken with promptitude and finished as quickly as possible.[11] As to whether the fact that a Civil Court has adjudicated on the rights of the parties, puts an end to the dispute so as to make this section inapplicable, see Note 44 below. As to the effect of a suit being filed pending the proceedings under this section, see Note 48, infra.

The jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section is an exceptional one and the provisions of the section should consequently be strictly followed when action is taken under it.[12]

3-A. Applicability to cases arising under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act.—The Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (Bengal Act V of 1920) makes provision for the prevention of disputes concerning recently formed lands and in cases covered by that Act, the proper course would be to institute proceedings under that Act and not to proceed under this section. Where the Collector takes proceedings under that Act, all proceedings under this section including attachment of the property have to be stayed under the provisions of S. 10 of that Act.[1] It has been held however that the provisions of S. 145 have not been impliedly repealed by S. 10 of that Act, and that if any proceedings have been taken under this section, they are not without jurisdiction.[2]

4. Sections 107, 144 and 145 compared.—A Magistrate is responsible for the preservation of the law and order within the local limits of his jurisdiction and for this purpose is entrusted with several weapons under the Code for the maintenance of the peace. Thus, under S. 107, ante, he has power to take security from a person who is likely to disturb the peace. In cases of emergency he has power to make temporary orders under S. 144. Where there is a dispute as to immovable property and such dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, he has powers under this section of declaring the possession of one of the disputing parties and of forbidding any disturbance of such possession.[1]

The exercise of the powers under S. 107 and S. 144 is discretionary, while this section requires that the Magistrate shall proceed as provided therein.[2] Where a dispute relating to immovable property is likely to cause a breach of the peace but there is no emergency, S. 144 will not of course apply[3] and the most appropriate remedy will be to proceed under this section.[4] Suppose now that the circumstances of a particular case satisfies the conditions necessary for the applicability of S. 107, S. 144 as well as of this section. What course is the Magistrate to adopt? It has been held generally that the Magistrate is not limited to the exercise of the powers under this section only but he may act under Ss. 107 or 144[5] though the proper course would be to proceed under this section."[6] The question is really one of propriety and not of jurisdiction.[7] The Magistrate may find that after an order is passed under S. 107 or under S. 144 the likelihood of a breach of the peace no longer exists. In such a case action under this section becomes unnecessary.[8] On the other hand pending proceedings under this section, the emergency referred to in S. 144 may arise. In such a case an order under S. 144 is not without jurisdiction.[9]

But whether action has been taken under S. 107 or S. 144 or not, the Magistrate must if the conditions as to its applicability exist, take action under this section either in supercession or in continuation of the orders, if any, passed under Ss. 107 or 144.[10] In this sense the section is mandatory,[11] and the Magistrate cannot rest satisfied with, or continue from time to time the order passed under those sections and thus avoid an enquiry under this section.[12] If he does so his action will amount to an abuse of the process of the Court.[13]

It is inadvisable that proceedings under S. 107 and under S. 144 or S. 145 should be allowed to go on at the same time.[14]

5. Nature of proceedings under this section.—A proceeding under this section constitutes an "inquiry" within the meaning of S. 4 (k), ante.[1] It is of a quasi executive character.[2] The action is of a purely preventive and provisional nature in a civil dispute pending formal adjudication of the rights of the parties[3] and is not of a punitive nature nor a matter relating to an offence for the application of Ss. 182 and 185, infra.[4]

It has been held that a proceeding under this section is a case within the meaning of Ss. 192, 526 and 528, infra.[5] In this view the District Magistrate has power under S. 192 to transfer a proceeding of which he has taken cognizance and he can be said to have taken cognizance of a proceeding only when he has satisfied himself that there are grounds for proceeding under this section and passed a preliminary order.[6] See Ss. 192, 526 and 528, infra. He can transfer the proceeding to any Magistrate subordinate to him empowered to pass orders under this section and it is not necessary that such Magistrate should have territorial jurisdiction over the subject of the disputes.[7] It has been held in the undermentioned cases that a proceeding under this section is a 'criminal' case.[8] The High Court has power under S. 526, infra, to transfer a proceeding under this section.[9] See S. 526, infra. But as sub-S. (8) of S. 526 does not in terms apply to a proceeding under this section, a party is not entitled to an adjournment of the proceedings under that sub-section.[10]

An application to a Magistrate to take action under this section is not a complaint [S. 4, Cl. (h)] as it does not relate to an offence.[11] The initiation of a proceeding under this section may, in proper cases, constitute malicious prosecution of the other party so as to entitle him to claim damages in a civil action.[12]

6. Who can take action under this section.—Any of the Magistrates mentioned in the section may institute proceedings if he is satisfied that there is a dispute concerning land or water which is likely to cause a breach of the peace; the mere fact that a Sub-divisional Magistrate declined to take action in a particular case is no bar to the District Magistrate instituting proceedings if on the same materials he is satisfied as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace[1] even though no application has been made to him.[2] But where an order has been passed by a Magistrate under this section, it is not competent for another Magistrate also to take action while that order is in force; the proper course for him is to give effect to the order in case there is any likelihood of a breach of the peace.[3]

It was held in a case decided under the Code of 1872 that a Bench of Magistrates has no power to institute proceedings under this section.[4] Under the present S. 15, sub-S. (2) the Local Government may empower any Bench of Magistrates to exercise the powers of a first class Magistrate and this will include the power to take action under this section.

7. "Is satisfied."—It is essential for the assumption of jurisdiction to initiate proceedings under this section that the Magistrate should be satisfied from a Police Report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists.[1] Such a finding should be clear and unambiguous.[2] It is not possible however to lay down any hard and fast rule to specify the sufficiency of the materials upon which a Magistrate ought to be satisfied, before he assumes jurisdiction in any particular case.[3] He is not bound to take action on a Police Report or upon an expression of opinion by the Police,[4]—but he should have a statement of facts before him so that he may exercise his own judgment in arriving at a conclusion as to the necessity of taking action under this section.[5] He should however proceed with great caution where there is no Police Report and the only materials before him are statements of interested persons.[6] Where there are no materials at all before the Magistrate on which he could come to any finding, the mere fact that he states he is satisfied is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction under this section.[7]

The question whether upon the materials placed before him, proceedings should be instituted under this section, is one entirely within the Magistrate's discretion[8] and the High Court or the District Magistrate has no authority to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to institute proceedings under this section.[9]

The Magistrate is entitled to form his own opinion on any information, not necessarily on evidence at all, and he need not summon or examine any witnesses before passing the preliminary order.[11] The cases decided under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 to the effect that the Magistrate ought to afford opportunities to the parties to adduce evidence to satisfy him as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace are no longer of any importance in view of sub-S. (1) of the present section.[12]

The mere fact that a Magistrate issues an order under sub-S. (1) would not necessarily lead to the inference that the Magistrate was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. But when it is found that the Magistrate had ample ground for apprehending a breach of the peace and that he did issue an order under sub-S. (1) it can be held that he was satisfied regarding the likelihood of a breach of peace although he omitted to say so in his order.[13]

8. "Police Report."—In the corresponding sections in the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the words "Police Report" were absent, and it was held in cases decided under those Codes that the Police Report was inadmissible as evidence, even to show that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed.[1] Under the present section, the Magistrate is entitled to peruse a Police Report for the limited purpose of satisfying himself as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, and as to the identity of the subject matter and of the contending parties.[2] It is inadmissible as evidence in the inquiry relating to the possession of the parties.[3]

The Police Report to a Magistrate suggesting initiation of proceedings under the section should not be confined to written reports which the Police themselves might have received. The Police themselves must inquire whether a breach of the peace is likely and state their grounds for their opinion and it is the result of their inquiry and not merely a copy of the reports which they may have received that is to be communicated to the Magistrate.[4] mere fact that he acts at the instance of the District Magistrate will not deprive him of jurisdiction).

9. "Or other information."—A proceeding under this section being one to prevent a breach of the peace, the Magistrate has the widest possible latitude in interpreting the words "other information."[1] Thus they are wide enough to include the knowledge derived from any source whatever; it is not necessary that any person should have actually informed the Magistrate.[2] The Magistrate can base his action on the complaint filed by one of the parties[3] or on the statement on oath of the person who presented the complaint[4] or on a perusal of the petitions filed by the parties in another proceeding.[5]

[See also Note 5, supra.]

10. Effect of previous civil proceedings on the institution of proceedings under this section.—See Note 11, infra.

11. "Dispute", meaning of.—There is nothing in the section to show that the word dispute as used in this section has anything other than its ordinary meaning of disagreement, struggle, scramble or quarrel.[1] Where therefore there is any dispute concerning land, etc., it would seem to be proper for the Magistrate to act under this section, independent of the question whether such dispute is reasonable or bona fide, or where a decree has been passed in favour of a party or possession has been delivered to him in execution.[2] Indeed, the question whether a dispute is reasonable or bona fide would necessitate an inquiry into the rights of the parties[3] which is prohibited by the section. [See sub-S. (4)]. It has however been held in the undermentioned cases that the dispute must be a reasonable[4] or bona fide one.[5] It has also been held that where the rights of the parties have been "within a time not too remote" adjudicated between the parties by a decree of a Civil Court there can be no bona fide dispute between the parties.[6] According to yet another class of cases[7] the dispute means a dispute as to possession in the eye of the law, and that where a party to a Civil Court's decree has been placed in possession by the Court in execution of the decree there is thereafter no dispute as to possession in the eye of the law and the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take action under this section. If there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace in such cases the duty of the Magistrate in such cases is to maintain the Civil Court's decree or possession,[8] by taking action against the unsuccessful party under Ss. 107 or 144, ante.[9] It is submitted that the reasons stated above for these views are not correct. If the views are correct they would involve the consideration by the Magistrate of the questions as to the nature and form of the Civil Court's decree or of the execution proceedings, the binding nature of the decree or of the delivery of possession on the parties before him, whether the parties were properly represented in such proceedings, whether such decree or execution proceedings are final or are challenged or set aside in subsequent proceedings, and what events have happened subsequently which have the effect of altering or modifying the rights of the parties as conferred by such decree or delivery of possession.[10] That the Magistrate has no power to enquire into such questions is stated expressly in sub-S. (4) by the use of the words "the Magistrate shall then without reference to the merits of the claims of any of the parties to a right to possess the subject, etc." A decree-holder or auction-purchaser placed in possession by the process of Court has to maintain his own possession and the law gives him the same assistance as it gives to other persons in possession and leaves to him the same liberty to part with his possession.[11] But if he is forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months of such delivery of possession, the Magistrate has power to restore his possession under sub-S. (6) as a forcible disturbance of possession is contrary to criminal law. But if he does not complain of such dispossession for over two months and sleep over his rights to claim reinstatement, he has the right thereafter to come to a Criminal Court and ask the Magistrate to maintain the Civil Court's decree or delivery of possession.[12]

12. Likely to cause a breach of the peace.—The jurisdiction conferred upon a Magistrate to institute proceedings under this section is of an exceptional character, and can be exercised only when the dispute is such that it is likely to cause a breach of the peace.[1] It is thus determined by an apprehension of a breach of the peace, and not by any infringement of private rights[2] or by the dispossession of any of the parties,[3] and the Magistrate should be very careful in acting under this section, to guard himself against the danger of assuming jurisdiction in cases, where the "suggested apprehension of the breach of the peace is little more than colourable and made simply to induce the Court to deal with matters properly cognizable by a Civil Court."[4]

The Magistrate should satisfy himself from the materials on record that, on the date he purports to act, there is present a fear that there will be a breach of the peace owing to the dispute, unless proceedings are taken under this section.[5] Thus where there is no present danger of a breach of the peace,

S. 145, Notes 12—13.

the fact that a breach of the peace is likely to take place at some future time will not justify a Magistrate in taking action under this section.[6] But it is not necessary that there should be a danger of an imminent breach of the peace[7] or that there should have been any overt acts of violence.[8] It is sufficient for Magistrate to institute proceedings if there is a reasonable apprehension that a disturbance of the peace is likely to occur.[9] Though all the persons concerned in the dispute may be of a peaceful disposition, yet if the dispute is, in its nature, of such a kind that it is likely having regard to known conditions of society to lead to a breach of the peace, it is enough to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under this section.[10] But where a breach of the peace has already occurred and a complaint is filed alleging several offences, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section, and the proper course is to inquire into the offences and order redelivery of possession if necessary under S. 522, infra.[11]

Where the Magistrate finds that no breach of the peace is likely, he has no jurisdiction to give any directions regarding the subject of the dispute.[12]

13. Subject of the dispute.—The subject of the dispute must be land or water or the boundaries thereof. A dispute relating to the distribution of fees payable to pilgrims is not one within the section.[1-a] The subject-matter of the dispute should be ascertained definitely and described clearly in the preliminary order.[1] The absence of clear specification of the subject of the dispute is a serious defect[2] though it will not vitiate the proceedings when the parties were under no misapprehension regarding it.[3]

S. 145, Notes 13—14.

Where a land consists of several plots and each plot is the subject of a separate dispute and each such dispute stands on its own footing, it is not proper for the Magistrate to club all such items together and treat them as one for the purposes of an inquiry under this section.[4] Where however none of the parties to the proceeding were prejudiced by such a course[5] or where all such items were covered by the same state of circumstances and there was only a single dispute in respect of all of them[6] the mere fact that the Magistrate did not institute separate proceedings in respect of each such item is not sufficient to invalidate the proceedings.

Where the dispute relates to possession of an undivided share in a property, the Magistrate has no power to institute proceedings under this section, as the subject of the dispute cannot be ascertained definitely.[7] As to cases where the dispute relates to joint possession between co-owners in respect of a definite piece of land, see Note 45, infra.

14. "Within the local limits of his jurisdiction."—It is only where the dispute relates to property within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, that the Magistrate is empowered to institute proceedings under this section.[1] Thus where a portion only of the subject of dispute lies within the Magistrate's jurisdiction, he has power to pass orders only in respect of such portion; an order passed in respect of the whole property is ultra vires.[2] The Magistrate has however jurisdiction to decide if the subject of the dispute is within the local limits of his jurisdiction,[3] and where it is uncertain as to whether the subject of dispute is situate in one or the other of two local areas, it has been held that the proceedings may be taken by a Magistrate having jurisdiction over any of such areas.[4]

An objection to the jurisdiction (territorial) of the Magistrate should be taken at the earliest opportunity, and a party will not be allowed to wait, take a chance of a judgment in his favour and being unsuccessful raise the questions of jurisdiction in revision.[5]

S. 145, Notes 14—15.

15. Effect of non-compliance with the provisions of the section.—The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to institute proceedings under this section arises on his being satisfied:—

(a) that there is a dispute concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof, and

(b) that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace.[1]

Thereupon the section provides for the procedure to be adopted in respect of the action that the Magistrate is empowered to take under this section. As has been seen already the provisions of the section are mandatory and should be strictly followed. (See Note 3, ante.) The question however arises as to what is the effect of non-compliance with all or any of such provisions on the proceedings taken by the Magistrate under this section. It has been held that a non-compliance, in the undermentioned instances being a violation of a mandatory provision of law rendered all subsequent proceedings void and without jurisdiction.

(a) Failure to draw up a preliminary order.[2]

(b) Failure to set out the grounds in the preliminary order.[3]

(c) Failure to specify the property in dispute, in the preliminary order.[4]

(d) Failure to serve or publish the notice as required by sub-S. (3).[5]

(e) Refusal to receive the evidence adduced by the parties—Sub-S. (4).[6]

It is submitted that this view is not correct on principle. The jurisdiction of the Magistrate does not depend upon how he proceeds.[7] As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahiman v. Emperor,[8] the bare fact of an omission or irregularity in a matter of procedure unaccompanied by any probable suggestions of any failure of justice having been occasioned thereby is not sufficient to invalidate the proceedings. The only test therefore in such cases is whether the parties have been prejudiced by reason of such irregularity or omission (see S. 537, infra), and if in spite of a failure to conform to the provisions substantial justice has been done, the defect is cured under S. 537, infra, and the final orders thereon will not be interfered with in revision.[9]

S. 145, Notes 16—17.

16. Preliminary order.—On the Magistrate being satisfied that preventive action under this section is necessary (see Notes 7, ante), he should make a preliminary order in writing containing the following particulars:—

(1) A statement that the Magistrate is satisfied as to the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. See Note 12, ante.

(2) The grounds of his being so satisfied. See Note 17, infra.

(3) A correct description of the property in respect of which the proceedings are instituted.

(4) A statement of the names of persons concerned in such dispute, see Note 19, infra.

(5) A direction requiring such persons to attend his Court within a time to be fixed and to put in written statements of their claims in respect of the fact of actual possession.

The object of such an order is to give all persons concerned in the dispute notice that the Magistrate is taking action under this section to prevent a breach of the peace, and to provide them opportunities to prove their claims before him so as to enable him to decide which of the parties was in possession of the property at the date of the initiation of the proceedings.[1] It is not however necessary that the order should be in any particular form or recorded in a separate sheet.[2]

It was held in the undermentioned cases that it is the preliminary order that gives the Magistrate jurisdiction to proceed under this section, and therefore that an omission to draw up a preliminary order renders all proceedings without jurisdiction.[3] It is submitted that this view is not correct. As has been seen in Note 15, supra, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate arises on his being satisfied as to the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and the direction to draw up a preliminary order under sub-S. (1) is only a matter relating to procedure and not to jurisdiction.[4] As to the effect of a failure to draw up a preliminary order, see Note 15, supra.

17. Statement of grounds in the preliminary order.—It is obligatory on the Magistrate to state in writing the grounds of his being satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace on account of a dispute concerning immovable property.[1] The object of requiring the grounds to be stated is firstly to inform the parties concerned in the dispute against whom the proceedings are instituted of the reasons which have induced the Magistrate to take action[2] and secondly to enable the High Court, in case the matter should come up subsequently in revision, to ascertain whether the institution of proceedings under those circumstances was justified.[3] The term "ground" includes the particulars of the information which have satisfied the Magistrate that action is necessary and does not merely mean the source of the Magistrate's information.[4]

It is not necessary that the grounds should be furnished in any particular form, it is enough if they exist and appear in the records of the proceedings.[5] Thus it is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sub-S. (1) if the Police Report[6] or the complaint filed by any of the parties[7] sets out the grounds sufficiently and is expressly referred to by the Magistrate in his preliminary order. It is not absolutely necessary that they should be stated seriatum in the preliminary order itself.[8] As to the effect of omission to set out the grounds, see Note 15, supra.

19. "Parties concerned in such dispute."—It has been seen already that the Magistrate's jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section is dependent upon his being satisfied that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. His jurisdiction to require particular persons to attend the proceedings would equally depend upon his being satisfied that they were concerned in such dispute.[1] It is therefore the duty of the Magistrate to ascertain as far as he can, on the materials before him, who are the parties concerned in such dispute before he initiates the proceedings.[2] He should mention their names specifically in the preliminary order and require them to attend his Court and put forward their claims to possession of the property.[3] S. 145, Note 19.

The words "parties concerned in such dispute" do not mean merely the persons actually disputing,[4] or persons actually present at or near the land and concerned in the threatened breach of the peace.[5] They refer to persons claiming to be in possession at the time of the preliminary order—though not actually concerned in the apprehended breach of the peace.[6] It was however held in the undermentioned cases that the words include all persons interested or claiming a right to the property in dispute and that the Magistrate is therefore bound to make them parties to the proceedings.[7]

The owner or proprietor of the property who is in possession through his servant or manager is a person concerned in the dispute and is therefore a necessary party to the proceedings.[8] It is not necessary in such cases to make the servants or the manager parties to the proceedings as their possession is simply that of their master or proprietor.[9] A Receiver appointed by a Court who is in possession on behalf of the Court cannot be said to be a person "concerned in the dispute" and cannot be made a party to the proceedings without the leave of the Court appointing him.[10]

In a dispute between rival landlords however, the tenants who are actually in possession in their own right are necessary parties to the proceedings.[10-a]

In a dispute between two communities, the Magistrate may choose the right persons to represent each community and pass an order binding on the communities though there is no provision corresponding to O. 1, R. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code.[11]

See also the following cases.[12]

As to the effect of non-joinder of necessary parties, see Note 20, infra.

20. Addition of parties.—The section contains no provision for addition of parties after the commencement of the inquiry. Sub-S. (5) merely enables third parties (persons interested) to intervene for a limited purpose, viz., that of shewing that no dispute likely to cause a breach of peace exists: it does not enable new parties to be added.[1] It has however been held that the Magistrate has power to add parties even after the initiation of the proceedings provided that such parties were originally concerned in the dispute which is the foundation of the proceedings, but that such power of adding parties should be exercised before the commencement of the inquiry under sub-S. (4).[2] After the commencement of the inquiry however, new parties cannot be added but if they are added, the inquiry should commence de novo in their presence.[3]

The question of non-joinder or mis-joinder of parties to a proceeding under this section is a matter relating to procedure and does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.[4] It is at the most an irregularity which may be sufficient to vitiate the proceedings only if the parties are prejudiced by reason of such irregularity.[5] See S. 537, infra.

21. Non-joinder of parties—Effect.—See Note 20, supra.

22. Continuation of proceedings by or against legal representatives—Sub-S. (7).—There was no provision in the Code of 1882 for substitution of legal representatives for deceased parties and it was held that the son could not be made a party on the death of his father pending the proceedings—as he was not a "party concerned in the dispute."[1] This Code as it stood before the amendment provided however that proceedings under this section shall not abate by reason only of the death of any of the parties thereto. But it was held in the undermentioned case[2] that as there was no specific provision for bringing in the legal representatives on the record all that the Court had to decide was whether the proceedings had not abated by the death of any of the parties. The introduction of sub-S. (7) by the amendment of 1923 now specifically provides for bringing in of the legal representatives of deceased parties on the record and the Court has no power to drop the proceedings on the death of any of the parties.[3] S. 145, Notes 22—25.

It has been held, however, that the power of substitution cannot be extended to applications for revision under S. 435 against orders under this section, and that therefore that an application for revision abates on the death of any of the parties thereto.[4]

23. "His Court".—The preliminary order should direct that the parties should attend the Court of the Magistrate issuing the order. The jurisdiction to make the final order is however not personal to the Magistrate making the preliminary order.[1]

24. Written Statements.—The object of requiring the parties to file written statements of their claims to possession is merely to assist the Magistrate in ascertaining the grounds on which they claim possession; they are not in the nature of pleadings in a civil action. The inquiry into the question of possession is therefore not necessarily limited to the allegation made in the written statements[1] and the failure of the parties to file their statements will not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to make the inquiry.[2]

As the object of the proceedings is to settle the disputes though temporarily on a judicial inquiry into the question of possession, the Magistrate should not ordinarily refuse to provide opportunities to the parties to file their statements although he has a discretion to refuse to grant an adjournment for the purpose.[3]

25. "Fact of actual possession".—The words 'actual possession' mean actual physical possession—not necessarily lawful possession.[1] It includes the possession of a mere trespasser.[2] It should however be real and tangible,[3] that is there should be effective occupation and control over the property.[4] A stealthy act of ploughing and sowing in the absence of the other side is neither real nor tangible possession.[5] The possession contemplated by the section should also be continuous.[6] An isolated act of trespass or the possession of the property for one day in a year or one day in a week is not such possession as is contemplated by the section.[7] By continuous possession is meant however such possession which a party in possession may have to exercise, has exercised or exercises whenever he likes.[8] The continuous possession should therefore be understood to be such possession as the nature of the property is susceptible of.[9] Actual possession is not however confined to mere bodily possession.[10] It includes the possession of the master through his servant,[11] of the proprietor through his agent or manager[11-a] of the landlord through his immediate tenant[12] or of a usufructuary mortgagee.[13] Thus in a dispute between rival landlords, the Magistrate may make an inquiry as to who holds the property though the tenants are in actual occupation of the land.[14] But where the dispute is between the landlord and his tenant, the Court cannot find possession of the landlord through his tenant.[15] Similarly the possession of a servant which is simply that of his master and merely permissible cannot be maintained as against his master.[16]

26. "Land or water or the boundaries thereof".—The expression 'land or water' is described in sub-S. (2). The Codes of 1861 and 1872 contained a similar definition of land or water. In the Code of 1882 however the words were replaced by the words "concerning tangible immovable property or the boundaries thereof". In cases decided under that Code it was held that disputes regarding incorporeal rights such as rights to ferry or rights to fishery or rights to collect rents and profits in respect of immovable property, would not come within the meaning of "tangible immovable property" and that therefore such disputes should if at all be properly dealt with only under S. 147, infra, and not under this section.[1] Such rights have now been included within the purview of this section by the introduction of sub-S. (2) in this Code.

(v) Dispute regarding collections and offerings in a temple;[17]

(vi) Dispute relating to collection of fees from pilgrims at Sradh Ceremony at Gaya;[18]

(viii) Dispute as to the right of succession to a mutt and its appurtenances;[20]

(ix) Disputes as to rights to joint possession of immovable property.[21]

Moveable property as such would not ordinarily come within the purview of the section unless it is in the shape of standing crops or other produce of land or rents and profits of the land in dispute.[22] But where such moveable property is included in the immovable property or is in the premises of such immovable property, prima facie it belongs to the person entitled to possession of the immovable property and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass orders under this section even in respect of such property.[23]

In cases of disputes likely to cause a breach of the peace but not coming strictly within the purview of this section, the Magistrate should take security from both the parties to the dispute under S. 107.[24]

See Note 2, supra.

27. Service and publication of the preliminary order sub-S. (3).— Sub-S. (3) provides that a copy of the preliminary order should be served on such person or persons as the Magistrate may direct in the manner provided for the service of summons. (See Ss. 68—74, ante), and that it should also be published by being affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the subject of the dispute. The object of publication of the order is to bring the proceedings to the notice of all persons interested in the property in dispute besides the persons named in the preliminary order and also to inform them of the grounds on which the proceedings are instituted.[1] The order should specify the date[2] and the place[3] where the inquiry by the Magistrate is to be held, in order to enable the parties to put in their written statements and to adduce evidence in support of their respective claims. S. 145, Notes. 27—28.

The Magistrate takes action under this chapter on behalf of the Crown with the sole object of preventing a breach of the peace, and therefore all processes for service or publication of the order should be issued at Government expense, and the parties named in the preliminary order should be ranged on one side, as first party, second party and so on.[4]

The Magistrate should satisfy himself before proceeding to make the inquiry under sub-S. (4), that proper service of the order has been effected[5] and where a party appears and complains that he was not properly served, it is the duty of the Magistrate to afford him an opportunity of adducing his evidence if it is found that he was not properly served.[6]

28. Omission to serve or publish the order.—It has been held in some cases that the use of the word 'then' in sub-S. (4) indicates that a compliance with the provisions of sub-S. (3) is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to make the inquiry under sub-S. (4)[1] and that as the provisions of sub-S. (3) are mandatory, a failure to carry out the provisions renders the proceedings of the Magistrate without jurisdiction[2] and therefore that such a defect is not curable under S. 537, infra.[3] On the other hand a contrary view has also been held that the use of the word 'then' in sub-S. (4) indicates merely the sequence or the order of the proceedings and does not constitute any condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction.[4] Accordingly an omission to carry out the procedure laid down for the service or publication of the order has been held not an error of jurisdiction, but if anything only an irregularity which may be sufficient to invalidate the proceedings in cases where the parties are prejudiced by reason of such irregularity.[5] See Note 15, ante, for a fuller discussion as to the effect of non-compliance with the section.

S. 145, Note 29.

29. Attachment in case of emergency.—The power to order interim attachment of the property in dispute is limited to such cases only, where a likelihood of a breach of the peace is so imminent as to call for immediate action to prevent it;[1] and should therefore be exercised with great caution[2] inasmuch as the effect of the order may be to deprive the rightful person in possession, of the possession of the property. The Magistrate has thus no jurisdiction to attach a property merely for the purposes of avoiding future litigation.[3] The question whether the matter is one of such emergency as to justify an attachment is one within the Magistrate's discretion, and the exercise of such a discretion for the maintenance of the peace would not be lightly interfered with.[4]

Apart from the power to attach the property in urgent cases, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction under this section to pass any other temporary order in respect of the property pending inquiry into the question of possession.[4-a] Thus he has no power to order that neither party should cultivate the land during the pendency of the proceedings.[4-b]

The attachment is not effected merely by an order of restraint on alienation as in civil cases.[5] The object of the provision is to keep effective control of the subject in dispute so as to prevent the contesting parties from creating a breach of the peace in their attempts to obtain physical possession.[6] (See Form No. XXIII). The Magistrate should take possession of the property and manage it during the pendency of the proceedings and for this purpose it is quite competent for him, in his administrative capacity, or in the exercise of his inherent jurisdiction to appoint some person to manage on his behalf and subject to his control and supervision.[7] But the person so appointed is only an agent of the Magistrate, and has not got all the powers of a receiver appointed under S. 146.[8] The various modes in which an attachment can be effected are indicated in S. 88, sub-S. (4), ante[9] but it has been held that apart from this power of the Magistrate to appoint a person to manage the property on his behalf, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to appoint an interim receiver of the property in dispute.[10]

The custody of the Court during an attachment effected under this section enures for the benefit of such party as is found by the Magistrate to be in possession of the subject of dispute at the institution of the proceedings.[11] As to the effect of an attachment under S. 146, see Notes to S. 146, infra.

An order of attachment may, in case of emergency, be made at any time provided it is during the pendency of the proceedings. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order of attachment before drawing up the preliminary order.[12]

Where a party is dispossessed by an order of attachment under this section, he cannot file a summary suit under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act for recovery of possession, as the dispossession is not "otherwise in due course of law" within the meaning of that section.[13]

30. Appointment of a receiver.—See Note 29, supra.

It refers also to finished articles or semi-finished articles made from raw material and hence molasses being the produce of the factory can be sold, under the provisions of sub-S. (8), if subject to natural and speedy decay.[1]

32. Procedure at the inquiry.—The procedure to be adopted in the enquiry under this section is prescribed by the section itself.[1] It is analogous to, though distinct from, the procedure adopted in the trial of summons cases.[2] See S. 244, infra.

The witnesses should be examined in chief, cross-examined and re-examined; it is not proper to allow one party to examine all his witnesses in chief and postpone the cross-examination until all the other witnesses are examined in chief.[3] The inquiry should be commenced quickly[4] and should go on from day to day until all the evidence is taken and arguments are heard. The order should be passed as soon as possible.[5]

The inquiry is necessarily a short and summary one and the words 'if possible' in sub-S. (4) show that it is unnecessary for the Magistrate to formulate a decision on the question of possession if it should present insuperable difficulties.[6] He should either proceed under S. 146, infra or under the provisions of S. 107 in such cases.[7]

33. Issue of summons to witnesses—Sub-S. (9).—The procedure to be followed is laid down in the section itself and the provisions of the Code relating to the procedure to be adopted in summons cases are not applicable to proceedings under this section.[1] It was held in cases decided before the amendment of 1923 that as S. 244, infra is not applicable to a proceeding under this section, the parties were not entitled to obtain processes to enforce attendance of their witnesses and that the Magistrate could issue summonses only under S. 540, infra if he considered their evidence essential.[2] It was however held in other cases (also decided before 1923) that the direction in sub-S. (4) to receive the evidence produced implies a duty on the Court to assist the parties in enforcing the attendance of their witnesses if it is shown that their evidence cannot be enforced without such assistance,[3] and that the Court should not arbitrarily refuse to issue process to witnesses cited by the parties.[4] Sub-S. (9) has been newly introduced by the Amending Act of 1923, on the lines of S. 244, sub-S. (2), infra to give effect to the latter view.[5]

34. Power to adjourn enquiry.—Having regard to the object of the proceedings under this section, namely to prevent a breach of the peace, an elaborate and protracted inquiry is not contemplated;[1] it is incumbent on the Magistrate to dispose of the case as quickly as possible with due regard to the rules of procedure prescribed by the section.[2] But as the enquiry is of a quasi civil nature, the Magistrate has a discretion in proper cases to adjourn the enquiry to enable the parties to file written statements of their claims or to adduce evidence in support of their claims to possession.[3] See S. 344, infra. S. 145, Notes 34—37.

But the parties are not entitled to an adjournment under the provisions of S. 526, infra, as S. 526 has no application to proceedings under this section.[4]

See S. 526, infra.

35. Perusal of statements.—A written statement is not evidence by itself, and the Magistrate should take evidence in proof of such a statement.[1] Even where one of the parties is absent and the other party files a statement alleging that he is in possession, the Magistrate cannot make an order in favour of the second party merely on the strength of that statement without taking evidence in support thereof.[2]

36. "Hear the parties".—Sub-S. (4) casts upon the Magistrate the obligation of hearing the parties, he should not debar a party from exercising his right of audience[1] on the ground that there is no documentary evidence in the case[2] or that such party has not filed any written statement in support of his claim.[3]

37. "Receive all such evidence as may be produced".—It is obligatory on the Magistrate to receive all such evidence as may be produced by the parties to prove the fact of possession.[1] He has however a discretion to curtail the number of witnesses to prevent the ends of justice being defeated or delayed but such a discretion should be exercised not arbitrarily[2] but with due care and caution and with a careful regard to the circumstances of the case.[3] Thus the fact that there was a local inspection[4] or that there were documentary evidence in the case[5] or that the police report contained some admissions by the parties,[6] cannot justify a Magistrate in refusing to receive oral evidence produced by the parties. But the mere rejection of a document produced by the parties, or the omission to receive certain evidence adduced by the parties is not sufficient to vitiate the findings arrived at by the Magistrate unless such evidence is material and the parties are prejudiced by such rejection or omission.[7]

38. "Consider the effect of such evidence and take such further evidence as he thinks necessary".—The Magistrate should come to a decision only on evidence adduced before him; he cannot decide the question of the actual possession of the property in dispute on no evidence at all[1] or merely on the written statements of the parties[2] or on his personal impressions[3] or on the report of a local inspection[4] or on a police report[5] or on statements of the parties not made on oath.[6] In such cases and in cases where the evidence before him is not sufficient to enable him to come to a conclusion, he should himself call for further evidence and exercise the power of summoning witnesses. (S. 540, infra), to enable him to decide the question of possession[7] even though he may act suo motu.[8] The Magistrate is bound

even in cases where one party is absent, to satisfy himself by examining the evidence adduced by the other party that the other party is entitled to an order in his favour.[9] But where one of the parties admits the possession of the other, the Magistrate is entitled to act on such admission; it is not necessary that he should call for any fresh evidence.[10]

39. Procedure in recording evidence.—The evidence of witnesses in proceedings under this chapter should be recorded in the manner provided by Ss. 356, 357 and 359, infra.[1] It is not sufficient to record only a memorandum of such evidence. (S. 355.) Irregularity, in recording the evidence will not, however, vitiate the proceedings unless such irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice and has prejudiced the parties.[2] The Magistrate is bound to record the evidence of the witnesses himself and cannot delegate the duty to a subordinate Magistrate.[3] An order passed by a Magistrate on the evidence recorded by a subordinate Magistrate is one passed without jurisdiction.[4]

The parties to a proceeding under this section are not in the position of 'accused persons'.[5] Therefore where a Magistrate has recorded the evidence of witnesses in part and is succeeded by another Magistrate, the latter should record the rest of the evidence and pass final orders under S. 350, infra and the parties have no right to insist on a de novo inquiry under the proviso to S. 350.[6] (See S. 350, infra). Similarly the provisions of S. 360, apply to proceedings under this section subject to the qualification that there is no accused whose presence at the reading of the evidence is necessary.[7] See S. 360, infra.

40. Local inquiry and Local inspection.—Where the Magistrate finds it necessary to understand the topography of the property in dispute or to ascertain its features to enable him to appreciate the evidence offered in Court he may either:

or

(ii) make a local inspection of the property—See S. 539-B, infra.[1]

He has no power however to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to inquire into the question of possession and to make a report thereon.[2]

As to local inquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate see S. 148, infra.

The power of holding a local inspection should be used very sparingly and in exceptional cases and that only for the purpose of understanding and appreciating the evidence adduced in the case.[3] The reason is that the party against whom the result of the local inspection is used is put to a considerable disadvantage in having to remove any wrong impression which the Magistrate may have formed at such inspection.

The Magistrate should hold the local inspection only after due notice to the parties[4] and should make a record of any relevant facts observed at such inspection.[5] But a failure to make such a memorandum is not by itself sufficient to vitiate the proceedings, unless the parties have been prejudiced by such omission.[6]

41. Possession at the date of the preliminary order.—The Magistrate has to decide on inquiry and give a finding as to whether any and which of the parties was in possession of the property in dispute at the date of the preliminary order.[1] The only exception to this rule is the case where one of the parties has been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months of the date of the order in which case the Magistrate has to treat such person as having been in possession at the date of the preliminary order, under the proviso to sub-section.[4] See Notes 43, 47, infra). Except as provided by the proviso abovementioned, the Magistrate is not concerned with previous possession[2] or the question as to how the possession was obtained, though he may take these into consideration in deciding the question of possession at the date of the preliminary order.[3] In arriving at a decision, he should have due regard to the nature of the property and the mode in which acts of possession may be exercised over the property.[4] A single act of trespass or a stealthy act of ploughing will not constitute dispossession of the party who is otherwise in possession thereof.[5]

Where the Magistrate passed an order first under S. 144 restraining both parties from exercising acts of possession over the property and subsequently instituted proceedings under this section in respect thereof, it was held that the Magistrate was right in finding possession on the date of the preliminary order with the party who was in possession at the date of the order under S. 144, as in spite of the order under S. 144, the possession of such party should be deemed to have continued in law though he was restrained for the purpose of prevention of a breach of the peace from exercising acts of possession for a particular period.[6]

The Magistrate has no power to decide who should be in possession of the property in future without reference to possession at the date of the preliminary order.[7] Thus where the parties referred the question of possession to certain arbitrators and the arbitrators without deciding the question of possession on the date of the order passed an award stating who should be in possession in future it was held that the Magistrate should not act upon the award of the arbitrators regarding future possession and that the proper course for him to adopt would be to drop the proceedings on the settlement of the dispute under sub-S. 5.[8]

The Magistrate is not concerned with possession on the date of the inquiry[9] as no change of possession pending the proceedings is contemplated by the section.[10]

Where the Magistrate on inquiry decided the question of possession on the date of the preliminary order but omitted to mention the words "on the date of the preliminary order" in his final order, it was held that the omission was only an irregularity curable under S. 537, infra.[11]

Where the subject of dispute is a very considerable area of land, and the contention of both the parties is that they hold possession of this area through ryots, the question which the Magistrate has to solve with regard to possession is not the simple question of who is in possession of the whole land but who is in possession of the constituent portions of the land piece by piece by the hands of his ryots.[12]

S. 145, Notes 42—43.

42. Reference to arbitration.—As has been seen already the section directs that the Magistrate should himself receive all the evidence produced by the parties, and come to a conclusion on the evidence. Hence it is not proper to delegate the inquiry into possession, even with the consent of parties to arbitrators,[1] or to a Subordinate Magistrate.[2] Where however, the matter has been compromised, then there is no longer any "dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace" and the proper course for the Magistrate to adopt in such cases is to cancel the preliminary order and stay all further proceedings thereon under sub-S. (5).[3] Even where the Magistrate passes an order in terms of the compromise, it should in reality be treated as an order under sub-S. 5[4] and not as a final order under sub-S. 6. If it purports to be a final order, such an order is without jurisdiction, and the Magistrate is competent to institute fresh proceedings in respect of the subject of dispute.[5] But where the parties refer the question as to who was in possession on the date of the preliminary order to arbitration, the Magistrate may accept the findings of the arbitrators as evidence of possession and pass an order under sub-S. (6) on the basis of such evidence.[6]

43. Question of title.—The words "without reference to the merits of the claims of any such parties to a right to possess" in sub-S. (4) show that the Magistrate should confine himself only to the question of actual possession, and has no power to inquire into and decide on the rights of the parties to possession of the property.[1] But where he finds on such inquiry that the evidence as to possession adduced by the parties is equally balanced, and that he is unable to conclude from such evidence, which of the parties was in possession, he is entitled to inquire into the rights of the parties and to corroborate the evidence as to possession, by the presumption that possession follows title.[2] But such a presumption cannot be applied to cases where the evidence as to possession on both sides is equally unworthy of credit.[3] In such a case the proper course for the Magistrate to adopt would be to pass an order under S. 146, infra.[4]

S. 145, Notes 43—44.

44. Effect of prior proceedings on the inquiry into possession.—It has been seen already in Note 11, ante that the mere fact that a decree had been passed by a Civil Court awarding possession of the property in dispute or that possession of the property was delivered by that Court to one of the parties will not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to institute proceedings under this section. The question, however, arises as to what is the effect of such decree or delivery of possession on the inquiry into the question of possession by the Magistrate. It was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that it was the duty of the Magistrate in such cases to find possession in accordance with the Civil

S. 145, Note 44.

Court's decree or order and to maintain such possession, and that to take proceedings which had the effect of modifying or cancelling such decree or order was to assume a jurisdiction which the law did not contemplate. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The Magistrate who initiates the proceedings under this section has to determine the question of actual possession with reference to a particular point of time namely, the date of the preliminary order and in investigation of this question any previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court relating to possession of the property may throw considerable light upon the matter.[2] Thus the fact of delivery of possession or the entry in the Record of Rights may raise a presumption in favour of the continuance of that possession unless the other party can show that subsequently they have succeeded in effectively displacing the person put in possession.[3] But there is no inflexible rule of law that a Magistrate is concluded by every previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court relating to the property and the weight to be attached to any such previous order must depend upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.[4] The value of such order or decree as a piece of evidence must necessarily vary inversely with the time that has elapsed since the date of such order or decree and a delivery of symbolical possession is of little value as against third persons in possession under independent titles.[5] The Magistrate is however bound to refer to the Civil Court's decree or order relating to possession and to give his reasons in case he comes to a conclusion at variance with it[6] and he cannot discard other evidence relating to actual possession simply on the ground that there has been a previous delivery of possession in respect of the property.[7]

As to the effect of a previous order under this section or proceedings under this section see Note 56, infra.

45. Joint possession.—See also Note 13, ante.

It was held in the undermentioned cases[1] that where the parties had joint rights to possession of the property in dispute the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to institute proceedings in such cases as the dispute was between co-owners regarding the mode of possession and was not therefore one contemplated by this section. It is submitted that this view is not correct. On being satisfied that a dispute exists concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof (See Note 11, ante) the Magistrate acquires jurisdiction to inquire into the fact of actual possession. He cannot consider the question whether the parties have a title to possession jointly or have a title to separate possession.[1-a] (See Note 43, supra). In the inquiry into actual possession, however, three cases may arise for the Magistrate's consideration:—

Case (i).—The Magistrate may decide that one of the parties was in possession in fact on the date of the preliminary order; even though the parties may be entitled only to joint possession. In such a case the Magistrate should uphold the possession of the person in actual possession irrespective of the rights of the parties.[2] Where the managing member of a joint Hindu family is in possession of the property his possession being exclusive can be maintained against the other members of the coparcenary.[3] Even in cases where one member is in fact in actual possession, an order should be passed upholding his possession even as against the other members who may be entitled to joint possession.[4]

Case (ii).—The Magistrate may find that one party was in actual possession of a specific portion of the property or of some particular items and that the other party was in possession of the rest and that the possession of one party is not likely to interfere with the possession of the other. In such a case each separate portion or plot should for the purposes of this section be considered as a separate subject-matter of dispute and orders should be passed under sub-S. (6) maintaining the possession of the parties in respect of their respective portions.[5]

Case (iii).—The Magistrate may find that on the date of the preliminary order, both the parties were in joint possession of the property. In such a case he cannot pass an order under sub-S. (6) upholding the possession of one of the parties to the exclusion of the other, nor can he uphold such joint possession.[6] The reason is that the words such possession in sub-S. (6) refer to "actual" possession in sub-S. (1) and therefore an order under sub-S. (6) can be passed only in cases where one of the parties is found to be in actual or exclusive possession of the property.[7]

S. 145 Notes 45—46.

As to whether an order can in such cases be made under S. 146, see S. 146, infra.

46. Forcible and wrongful dispossession 'within two months next before date of order'.—There was no provision under the Codes of 1861, and 1872 corresponding to the first proviso to sub-S. (4). It was held in cases decided under those Codes that the Magistrate should find who was in peaceable possession of the property and should not therefore uphold the possession of a trespasser who by virtue of sheer force obtained possession—or in other words that the Magistrate should find who was in actual possession at the time the dispute originated.[1] It was also held in other cases that it was the duty of the Magistrate to uphold the possession of the person who was in exclusive possession at the date of the order even though such possession was obtained on forcibly dispossessing the other party.[1-a] These cases are no longer of any practical importance in view of the first proviso to sub-S. (4).

The Magistrate should first decide who was in actual possession of the property in dispute on the date of the preliminary order. If however such a party, in de facto possession of the property, is found to have obtained possession by forcibly and wrongfully dispossessing the other party within two months next before the date of the preliminary order, the Magistrate should treat the party so dispossessed as if he had been in possession at such date and restore to possession such party under sub-S. (6).[2] The proviso is based on the principle that a forcible and wrongful dispossession cannot be recognised under criminal law[3] and merely recites the circumstances under which a presumption of possession may be made in favour of the dispossessed party.[4]

The Magistrate should find the actual date of dispossession in respect of every item of the property in dispute before proceeding to apply the proviso.[5] Where a person dispossessed of the property, moves the Criminal Court to take action under this section within two months of such dispossession, but the Court does not pass the preliminary order until after the expiry of two months of such dispossession, has the Court power to restore to possession such party under this section? The High Court of Madras[6] has held that the object of S. 145 being to provide against forcible and wrongful dispossession, a liberal interpretation consistent with such object ought to be adopted, and therefore that the Magistrate has power, under the section to restore the possession of such party. The High Courts of Lahore[7] and Allahabad[8] the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[9] and Oudh[10] have however held that such considerations cannot alter the plain interpretations of the words of the statute and that therefore the Magistrate has no power to interfere in such cases. Where however no preliminary order at all was passed, the Magistrate has no power to apply the first proviso to sub-S. (4).[11]

In calculating the period of two months, the period during which one party was restrained by an injunction from entering into the property by an order under S. 144 cannot be excluded.[12] As to the power of the Magistrate to restore possession, see Note 54, infra.

47. "Forcible and wrongful", meaning of.—The dispossession should be both forcible and wrongful.[1] A distinction is drawn in this section between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful, and it depends upon whether the person entering was entitled to use force and not merely on the question whether he had a legal right to possession. Thus where a person armed with a warrant of delivery of possession makes a forcible entry into the property, it is not a case of wrongful dispossession; but if the person had only a right to possession and taking the law into his own hands makes a forcible entry, it is a case of wrongful and forcible dispossession.[2] The word "wrongfully" thus means no more than "otherwise than in due course of law."[3] (See Specific Relief Act, S. 9.)

In order that a dispossession should be "forcible", it is enough if it is effected by a show of criminal force sufficient to intimidate those in possession and to deter them from resistance: it is not necessary that actual force or violence should be used.[4] But, where a person enters upon the land of another in his absence removes his things and enters into possession, it has been held that such a dispossession is not "forcible" within the meaning of this section.[5]

48. Cancellation of the preliminary order—Sub-S. (5).—It has already been seen in Note 15, ante, that the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace is a condition precedent necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section. If in the course of such proceedings the Magistrate finds at any stage that there is, or has been no dispute, his jurisdiction ceases and he should cancel the preliminary order and stay all further proceedings thereon.[1] A party to the proceeding is not in the position of a plaintiff in a civil suit and has no right to require a decision on the points in dispute.[2] Sub-S. (5) provides for a special case in which the parties to the proceedings and even third parties ("persons interested") are given the right to show that no such dispute exists or has existed.[3] But the sub-section does not take away the power of the Magistrate to drop the proceedings suo motu on satisfying himself on proper materials from any source whatever that the state of things does not exist which alone would give him jurisdiction to proceed with the inquiry.[4] Thus where one of the parties files a suit in respect of the property and the Civil Court appoints a receiver thereof, there can be thereafter no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and the Magistrate is justified in dropping the proceedings under this section.[5] But the mere institution of a civil suit[6] or the fact that a decision as to possession was incidentally arrived at in a criminal case,[7] or the fact that one of the parties gives an undertaking not to enter the land[7-a] does not per se put an end to the dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace.

The question whether upon the materials before him the proceedings should be dropped is one entirely within the Magistrate's discretion.[8] It is not obligatory on him in case he proceeds suo motu to record any evidence or to afford opportunities to the parties to adduce evidence to the contrary[9] and it is not open to any party to question the propriety of the order dropping the proceedings in revision.[10] Where however the Magistrate passes such an order without any materials whatever, the order being without jurisdiction can be set aside in revision.[11]

On the making of an order dropping the proceedings, the Magistrate is functus officio and has no jurisdiction thereafter to pass any order relating to the claims of the parties[12] or to the disposal of the property[12-a] or the crops thereon[13] and the parties should be left to settle their rights in a competent Court or in any manner they choose.[14] Any attachment effected in the course of the proceedings automatically ceases, and the position of the parties is precisely the same as if no proceedings had been instituted at all under this section.[15] Where the profits, rents or realisations from the attached property are in Court deposit, the proper course to adopt, on the cancellation of the preliminary order, would be to keep the amount in Court deposit, until the party entitled to it has established his rights in a proper proceeding;[16] the Magistrate has no power to pass an order under S. 517, infra.[17]

Where the proceedings are dropped under sub-S. (5), the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revive the proceedings on any ground whatever.[18] However, he can start fresh proceedings if there are fresh materials sufficient to give him jurisdiction to do so.[19]

49. Finality of the preliminary order.—The preliminary order passed under sub-S. (1) is final. Unless it is cancelled as stated in Note 48 above, and the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to strike off proceedings on any other ground.[1] It is not, therefore, necessary for the Magistrate at the time of the final order, to come to a finding that there is or was no likelihood of a breach of the peace.[2]

50. "Any person interested."—The "person interested" who is enabled under sub-S. (5) to show that no dispute exists or has existed comes in for the limited purpose—that of bringing the proceedings to an end and does not thereby become a "party" to the proceedings.[1] The Magistrate cannot therefore pass the final order under sub-S. (6) in his favour.[2]

S. 145, Notes 50—51.

A tenant of part of the property in dispute is a person interested within the meaning of sub-S. (5).[3]

51. Order under this section.—A final order under sub-S. (6) should satisfy the following requirements:—

(a) It should decide that one of the parties was in possession or should be deemed to be in possession under the proviso to sub-S. (4), ante.

(b) It should declare that such party is entitled to possession until evicted in due course of law. See Note 52, infra.

(c) It should forbid disturbance of possession until such eviction.

(d) In case the Magistrate proceeds under the first proviso to sub-S. (4), it should restore possession to the party dispossessed. See Note 54, infra.

It is not necessary for the Magistrate to record a finding as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace.[1] He should however give a definite finding as to which of the parties was in possession of the subject of the dispute on the date of the preliminary order.[2] Such a finding should be based on proper inquiry and on a consideration of the effect of the evidence both oral and documentary adduced before him,[3] and should also be supported by a statement of the reasons which have influenced the Magistrate in coming to such a conclusion.[4] The Magistrate has no general powers to pass any final order except as provided by sub-S. (6).[5] Thus he cannot direct that a bond which is subject of the dispute should be removed,[6] or that superstructures standing on the land in dispute should be demolished.[7]

The final order should accurately specify the property in dispute with boundaries descriptions, etc., in respect of which it is passed.[8] The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass a final order in respect of lands not covered by the preliminary order[9] nor in respect of any moveable property.[10] If however the order is passed in respect of both moveable and immovable property, that part of the order relating to immovable property is valid.[11] As to the effect of an order under this section, see Note 56, infra.

The Magistrate should pass his final order as far as possible in accordance with Form No. 22 in Sch. V "with such variations as the circumstances of the case require" (S. 555) but the use of the form however is not obligatory.[12]

52. "Declare that such person is entitled to possession".—The Magistrate should declare that the person found to be in possession on the date of the preliminary order is entitled to the possession of the property until evicted in due course of law.[1] He has no jurisdiction to order that one party should be in possession throughout the year but that during certain seasons they should be in joint possession with the other party[1-a] or that one party should be in possession until he reaped the harvest and then surrender possession to the other party.[2] Similarly having found possession with one party he cannot declare possession of a portion only of the property leaving out the other portions for pathways.[3] Nor can he permit the other party to cultivate the land pending establishment of his possessory rights[4] nor can he order division of the crops on the land.[5] But he can find possession of the property restricted in its enjoyment by a right of way over it in favour of the other party and declare such restricted possession.[6] Similarly a declaration of a right to possess a temple subject to performance of puja in it by the other party is permissible.[7]

53. Evicted in due course of law.—A final order under sub-S. (6) is intended to be effective only up to the time a competent Court takes seisin of the matter and passes an order of delivery of possession to the unsuccessful party to the proceedings, or passes such orders as may be necessary for the protection of the property.[1] Thus an order of a Civil Court appointing a receiver in respect of the property[2] or awarding restitution of the property under S. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code,[3] is an order evicting the person in possession within the meaning of this section. It is not necessary however that the order should be by a Civil Court. It should be passed by a Court acting under statutory authority to award possession.[4] An order of the Settlement officer merely recording possession is not such an order[5] while a decree in ejectment passed under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act will amount to eviction "in due course of law."[6] S. 145, Notes 53—56.

The terms "evicted" applies to cases where a person in possession is found to be disentitled to possession altogether as well as to cases where he is found disentitled to the extent of possession awarded to him by the Magistrate.[7] The term evicted means "dispossessed"; it is not enough if the unsuccessful party to the proceedings succeeds in getting a suit for confirmation of possession filed by the other party, dismissed: his remedy is to bring a suit for recovery of possession.[8]

54. Restoration of possession.—Previous to the amendment of 1923 there was no express provision of law authorising the Magistrate to restore to possession the person forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed (Notes 46, 47, ante), and it was held that though the Magistrate had power in such cases to declare the possession of the person, he had no power to order restoration of possession,[1] except in cases to which S. 522 was applicable.[2] The introduction in 1923 of the words "where he proceeds under the first proviso to sub-S. (4) may restore to possession, the person forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed" in sub-S. (6), enables the Magistrate now to put such person in actual possession.[3]

55. Power to award costs.—See S. 148, infra. The Magistrate has no power to award damages or costs to the other party except as provided by S. 148, infra.[1]

56. Effect of order under this section.—An order under this section is final and conclusive and is intended to be effective until the party in whose favour the order is made is evicted in due course of law.[1] The remedy of the unsuccessful party is thus only to file a suit; the Magistrate has no power to institute proceedings again in respect of the subject of dispute while the previous order is in force.[2] There is no express provision however authorising the Court to place the successful party in possession (except in cases to which the first proviso to sub-S. (4) applies—See Note 54, ante) or to pass consequential orders by way of the execution of the final order,[3] but the practical result of his order is to enable the successful party to take possession of the property,[4] and the Magistrate should enforce his order against persons disobeying it either by instituting proceedings against them under S. 188, Penal Code,[5] or by proceedings under S. 144 or 107, ante.[5-a]

A final order under this section does not in any manner affect the rights of the parties[6] nor does it give rise to a presumption in a Civil Court in favour of the successful party.[7] It is not necessary for the unsuccessful party to the proceedings to sue to vacate the order of the Magistrate.[8] The onus is, however, on him to show that he has a better title to the property than the person whose possession has been declared by the Magistrate.[9] The order of the Magistrate is admissible in evidence in the subsequent civil suit to prove the fact of the dispute, to show how it was settled, who were the parties thereto, and who was placed in possession by the Magistrate,[10] but the findings of the Magistrate on questions of fact relating to possession are inadmissible.[11]

S. 145, Notes 56—57.

An order under sub-S. (6) dispossessing a person will not be a ground for a suit under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act as such dispossession is not "otherwise than in due course of law" within the meaning of that section.[12] But where the dispossession occurred long before the institution of the proceedings, it has been held an order under this section will not be a bar to a suit under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act[13] or under the Mamlatdar's Act.[14]

The Magistrate has no power to review the final order passed by him under sub-S. (6)[15] but he can at any time correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in the order or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission.[16]

An order under this section is no bar to the Magistrate deciding in a case of rioting, who was at that time in possession of the subject of dispute.[17]

Similarly, such an order is no bar to the initiation of fresh proceedings under this section as the question to be taken into consideration by a Criminal Court under this section is that as to the present possession of the parties concerned.[18]

57. Effect of an order under this section on limitation.—Under Art. 47 of the Limitation Act, 1908, a person bound by an order of the Magistrate respecting immovable property has to bring a suit to recover the property comprised in the order within three years of the date of the final order.[1] If no suit is brought within three years by any person bound by such order, his right to possession of the property is extinguished under S. 28 of the Limitation Act.[2]

Article 47 has however no application in the following cases:—

(i) Where the order of the Magistrate is without jurisdiction.[3]

(ii) Where the suit is for redemption of the property, and not for recovery of the property.[4]

(iii) Where the suit is brought by a person in whose favour the order is passed.[5]

(iv) Where there is no existing right to sue for possession on the date of the Magistrate's order.[6]

(v) Where an application under S. 145 is dismissed or where the proceedings are dropped under sub-S. (5) and consequently no order respecting immovable property is passed.[7]

The period of three years has to be completed from the date of the order and not from the date of the order of the High Court dismissing an application for revision of the order.[8]

As to who are the persons bound by the order, see Note 58, infra.

58. Persons bound by the order.—There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether persons not actually parties to the proceeding under this section are bound thereby. In Nathubhai Brijlal, In re.[1] Chandavarkar, J., expressed the view that the requirement in sub-S. (3) as to a copy of the order being published near the property, indicated that the binding character of the order was not confined to the persons who were actually parties to the proceedings but extended to all persons concerned in the dispute who had notice of the proceedings. This view has been followed in the undermentioned cases.[2] In Ram Sahai v. Benode Behari Ghosh[3] it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order against the manager of a joint Hindu family is binding upon all the members though they were not actually parties to the proceeding and this decision has been followed by the High Court of Madras.[4] According to the High Court of Patna, an order against the representative of a community is binding on all the members of the community.[5] The same High Court has also held that the order is binding on all the persons who are interested in the possession of the property.[6] Nothing was stated as to whether such parties should have notice of the proceeding. The principle on which these decisions proceed are not however clear. The High Court of Lahore has held that an order under this section binds only the actual parties to the proceeding and none others.[7] It has dissented from the view expressed in Nathubhai Brij Lal's case and distinguished the case of an order against the manager of the family on the ground, that in such cases, the other members ipso facto become parties to the proceeding. See also the undermentioned cases.[7-a]

Where a person is "bound by the order" under this section, he or a person claiming through him should, under Art. 47 of the Limitation Act, file a suit to recover the property within three years from the date of such order.[7-b] Otherwise, by the operation of S. 28 of the Limitation Act, his rights will become extinguished. This however does not imply that the order operates as a judgment in rem in favour of the party in whose favour possession was maintained[8] and does not create any title by prescription against parties not bound by the order.[9]

59. Power to proceed under S. 107.—See Note 3, ante, and Note 60, infra.

60. Conversion of proceedings.—It has been seen already that the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to institute proceedings under S. 107 is not ousted by the mere fact that the dispute relates to immovable property.[1] Whether the Magistrate may institute proceedings under S. 107 in addition to proceedings under S. 145 or whether it would be proper for him to act under S. 145 after instituting proceedings under S. 107 would depend only upon the circumstances of each case.[2] But it would be very undesirable to institute simultaneous proceedings under both the sections when each section provides by itself sufficient remedies for the prevention of a breach of the peace.[3] In any case, a proceeding under S. 107 cannot be converted into one under S. 145 as the conditions necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to proceed under S. 145 have to be satisfied and the procedure indicated in the section have to be followed.[4] Similarly in a proceeding under S. 145, the Magistrate cannot take security from any or all of the parties since an order as to security could only be made after compliance with the provisions of Ss. 107—117, ante.[5] Where however the Magistrate initiated a proceeding under S. 144, but subsequently converted it into one under this section, in the presence of the parties who took active part thereupon in the subsequent inquiry into possession, it was held that the Magistrate's action is not illegal as the parties were not prejudiced by such conversion of proceedings.[6] But where the Magistrate converted a proceeding under S. 147 into one under this section without notice to the parties and without passing a preliminary order as required by this section it was held that the order should be set aside as it had operated to the prejudice of the parties.[7]

61. Revision.—See also Ss. 435—439, infra. Ss. 435, 438 and 439, infra, provide for revision by the High Court of orders passed by Magistrates under this chapter. Previous to the Amendment Act of 1923, the High Court had no power of revision of such orders, as sub-S. (3) to S. 435 precluded the application of S. 435 to proceedings under this chapter.[1] It was however held (in cases decided before the Amendment Act of 1923), that if there was an initial want of jurisdiction, a proceeding purporting to be one under this section is not really one under it and inasmuch as sub-S. (3) to S. 435 would not apply to such cases the High Court had the power to interfere in revision in such cases under S. 439,[2] but that such power should be exercised only in exceptional cases.[2-a]

S. 145, Note 61.

It was also held that the Chartered High Courts had the power of interference under the provisions of S. 107 of the Government of India Act (which replaced S. 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861) in such cases[3] and even in cases where the proceedings though properly started were vitiated on the ground of serious irregularity amounting to improper exercise of jurisdiction or improper refusal to exercise it.[3-a] These cases are no longer of any practical importance as sub-S. (3) to S. 435 has been omitted by S. 116 of Act XVIII of 1923, thus making the orders under this chapter open to revision as in the case of other proceedings.[4]

An application for revision of an order under this section should be made without unreasonable delay[5] and should be made only by persons who have a present claim to the possession of the property in dispute and not by persons having only contingent or future rights to possession.[6] It should be made in the first instance to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate and not to the High Court even though the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction under S. 435 to call for and examine the records of the proceedings.[7] The District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge has power only to make a report under S. 438, infra and has no power to revise the orders[8] or to order further inquiry under Ss. 436 or 437.[9]

The High Court will not interfere if final orders had not been passed by the Magistrate.[10] When the High Court is exercising revisional jurisdiction it is not exercising the powers of a Magistrate under Chapter XII and therefore has no power to appoint a receiver pending disposal of the revision application[11] or to award costs in respect of the application.[12] But it has been held that the High Court in its powers of superintendence conferred by S. 107 of the Government of India Act, is competent not only to revise the orders of Magistrates but also to give such other consequential directions as may be found necessary in the circumstances of the case.[13] As to when the powers of revision will be exercised by the High Court, see S. 439, infra.

Mere delay in drawing up the formal proceedings under this section after the receipt of the police report is no ground for interference in revision where there is no injustice caused by the Magistrate's order.[14]

A judgment of a single judge passed in revision is not open to appeal under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent as it is not made in a "criminal trial" within the meaning of that clause.[15]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1898—

The word "civil" which occurred in S. 146 of the Code of 1882, has been now omitted in this section. See Note 7, infra.

Changes introduced in 1923—

(1) In sub-S. (1), the proviso is new—See Note 11, infra.

(2) In sub-S. (2), the words "and if no receiver of the property, the subject of dispute, has been appointed by any Civil Court" are new—See Note 13, infra.

(3) The proviso in sub-S. (2), is new—See Note 13, infra.

2. Scope of the section.—If, in the inquiry under sub-S. (4) of S. 145, ante the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was in actual possession of the subject of dispute on the date of the preliminary order, or if the Magistrate is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in such possession, he should attach the property under this section.[1] The object of such an attachment is to maintain the status quo[2] by keeping the property in custodia legis so as to prevent the contesting parties from creating a breach of the peace until the rights of the parties are effectively determined by a competent Court.[3] As to the effect of the order of attachment, see Notes 7 and 8, infra. An order of attachment under this section being in the nature of an act of confiscation, the Magistrate should not make use of this section except on full inquiry and in exceptional cases.[4]

S. 146, Notes 2—4.

3. Inquiry into possession.—As to the scope of the inquiry, see S. 145, ante.

Before an order of attachment is made under this section it is necessary that proceedings should have been properly instituted under S. 145, the preliminary order duly passed and a proper inquiry made into the question of possession.[1] The Magistrate should, on such an inquiry, decide and give a finding, based on the evidence adduced before him, either that none of the parties was in possession of the property on the date of the preliminary order or that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in such possession. (See Notes 4 and 5, infra).[2] It is not necessary however that he should give a finding as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace.[3]

4. "None of the parties was then in such possession".—The word "parties" refers to the "parties concerned in the dispute" in sub-S. (1) to S. 145. (See Notes to S. 145). The Magistrate may attach the property in dispute if he finds that none of the parties was in possession on the date of the preliminary order. He cannot however do so where he finds that a third person was in possession of the property in dispute.[1] Nor can he declare the possession of such person under this section.[2] The proper course, in such cases would be to proceed against the parties in dispute under S. 107.[3] Where however such third person does not claim to be in possession, the Magistrate may attach the property under this section.[4]

5. "Unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in such possession".—As has been seen in the Notes to S. 145, the inquiry by the Magistrate is restricted to a determination of the fact of actual possession. The Magistrate cannot consider the title of the parties to the property and cannot therefore pass an order under this section on the ground of his inability to decide on the rights of the parties to possession,[1] or to understand or interpret the terms of a Civil Court's decree.[2] The doubt upon which the Magistrate can act must be the result of his inability to determine possession upon the evidence adduced in the case.[3] The Magistrate cannot, without making a proper inquiry and without receiving evidence offered by the parties, hold that he is unable to decide the fact of possession.[4] But where the parties do not adduce any evidence at all though they are given ample opportunities to do so, there is no obligation imposed on the Magistrate to make any independent inquiry or to hold any local investigation; he is entitled to attach the property on the ground of his inability to decide the fact of possession.[5]

As has also been seen in the notes to S. 145, ante the question of possession should be confined to the date of the preliminary order. Thus where the possession of one of the parties on the date of the preliminary order is admitted, the Magistrate cannot attach the property under this section, on the ground that he is unable to decide who was in possession for two months before the date of the preliminary order.[6] S. 146, Notes 5—7.

It has further been seen in the Notes to S. 145, that where the evidence on both sides is equally reliable and balanced and the Magistrate is unable to come to a conclusion on such evidence, he is entitled to consider the question of title and to draw a presumption as to possession arising from title. But where the evidence is equally unreliable on both sides, the Magistrate cannot draw any such presumption; he should attach the property under this section.[7]

6. Joint possession.—It has been seen already in the Notes to S. 145, ante that where the Magistrate decides that one party is in possession of a specific portion of the property and that the other is in possession of the rest, the Magistrate should pass an order under S. 145 maintaining the possession of the parties in respect of the respective portions. In such a case the Magistrate should not pass an order under this section attaching the entire property on the ground that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them is in possession of the entire property.[1]

If however the Magistrate finds that the parties were in joint possession on the date of the preliminary order, can he pass an order of attachment under this section? It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[2] Bombay[3] Calcutta[4] and Patna[4-a] that he can on the ground that he is not able to satisfy himself as to which of the parties is in possession of the entire property. On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras[5] that he has no power to pass an order under this section and that the proper course in such cases would be to bind over the parties under S. 107.

7. Decision of a competent Court.—In S. 146 of the Code of 1882, the words "competent Civil Court" were used and it was held in cases decided under that Code that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to attach the properties if the rights of the parties in dispute could only be decided by a Revenue Court.[1] The word 'civil' has been omitted in this Code, and it has been held that an order of the Collector under S. 41 of the Bengal Survey Act[2] or an order under S. 40 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act[3] is an order of a competent Court determining the rights of the parties to possession within the meaning of this section; though such an order, being mutation proceedings, is not a determination of title to the property.[4] But an order of the Revenue Divisional Officer in Madras deciding the question of registry of immovable property is not an order of a competent Court in respect of the question of the right to possess the subject of the dispute.[5]

The party filing the civil suit should establish his title to the property.[6] Where a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties to possession the Magistrate ceases to have authority to retain control of the property,[7] and he should withdraw the attachment and give possession on the basis of such a judgment.[8] It is sufficient if there is any adjudication of the question by a 'competent Court,' even though the judgment is not inter parties[9] and is in the nature of an obiter.[10] The mere fact that only symbolical possession was decreed in favour of one of the parties,[11] or that an appeal is pending against the judgment[12] or that the period of limitation for the appeal has not expired[13] is no reason for the Magistrate continuing to keep the property in attachment.

8. Order of attachment.—The object of an attachment under this section is to keep effective control of the subject of the dispute so as to prevent the contesting parties from creating a breach of the peace in their attempts to obtain physical possession.[1] Therefore actual taking and keeping of possession is contemplated when the Magistrate passes an order of attachment under this section,[2] see Form No. 22, infra.

The Magistrate has power to make an order respecting the management and control of the property during the period of such attachment,[3] and where the property is temple property, he has power to make such arrangements as may be necessary for the performance of the daily puja.[4]

Where the properties of a Mutt are attached under this section, the Magistrate has power to pass an order regarding the jewellery[5] or moveable property[6] appurtenant to the Mutt.

9. Effect of an order of attachment.—Where property is attached under this section it passes into custodia legis (See Note 2, ante), and the possession of the Court during the period of attachment enures to the benefit of the person who is ultimately found by a competent Court to be entitled to the property.[1] The legal possession being in the true owner, the attachment does not operate as dispossession of the rightful owner.[2] Hence the party claiming the property need only bring a suit for a declaration of his right to the property under S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.[3] He cannot bring a suit for possession against the defendant[4] or claim mesne profits from him during the period of attachment.[5] S. 146, Notes 9—10.

As to the effect of attachment on limitation for such suits see Note 10, infra.

The order of attachment is effective only up to the time, a competent Court decides the rights of the parties or passes such orders as may be necessary for the protection of the property.[6] Therefore any act done by the Court or by the Receiver during the period of attachment can enure only during such period, and cannot prejudicially affect the rights of the parties found entitled to the property.[7] As the possession is that of the rightful owner, the Government have no right to the profits derived from the property during the period of attachment.[8]

An order passed by the Magistrate after the order of attachment for the purpose of settling the lands attached is only an executive order and is therefore not open to revision by the High Court.[9]

Where the Court passes an order of attachment and the order is subsequently found to be erroneous and without jurisdiction, the person aggrieved by such an order has no cause of action for damages against the party who procured such order as the Court is not an agent of the litigant so as to make that litigant liable for errors of law or procedure which the Court commits.[10] property is held in legal custody and such custody should be deemed to be in law the possession of the rightful owner. Therefore if the true owner was in possession at the time of the attachment his possession in the eye of the law is not interrupted; where however the wrong doer was in possession at that date, the effect of the attachment would be to interrupt his possession and to hold the property adversely to him on behalf of the rightful owner.[1]

The question then arises as to what is the period of limitation within which the rightful owner should bring a suit to establish his rights to the property attached under this section.

Art. 47 of the Limitation Act has no application as its application is restricted to cases where an order respecting immovable property has been made in favour of one of the parties[2] (i.e., under sub-S. (6) to S. 145.)

Articles 142 and 144 also can have no application as by an order of attachment under this section there is in law no dispossession or discontinuance of possession of the true owner,—and as no suit for possession could be brought against the other party.[3]

It has been held by the High Court of Madras[4] that a suit for declaration of title to the attached property should be brought within 6 years of the date of attachment under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act but that even if the suit is barred under that article, the title of the rightful owner is not extinguished under S. 28 of the Act and therefore that the Magistrate should in such a case accept the finding in the suit as a determination of the title of the successful party and release the property from attachment. On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta[5] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[6] that Art. 120 would apply to such a case, but that attachment should be treated as a "continuing wrong" as far as the rightful owner is concerned under S. 23 of the Limitation Act.

11. Withdrawal of attachment.—Prior to the amendment of 1923, there was no provision for withdrawal of the attachment effected under this section, and it was held in the undermentioned cases that the Magistrate may withdraw the attachment under his inherent powers if he is satisfied that there is no longer any apprehension of a breach of the peace.[1] The proviso to sub-S. (1) gives effect to this view. It has been held that in withdrawing the attachment, the Magistrate may make over possession of the property to any party he thinks fit, and is not bound simply to direct the Receiver to abandon the property leaving the parties to scramble for it—but that in making over possession to any particular party, he should exercise a sound discretion.[2] S. 146, Notes 11—13.

12. Appointment of a Receiver—Sub-S. (2).—The Magistrate may appoint a Receiver if he considers it necessary for the management of the property which he attaches, under this section, but such an appointment can only be made under the circumstances mentioned in the section and after the completion of the enquiry.[1] He has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver during the enquiry.[2] See S. 145, ante.

As a matter of principle a person who has shown a partiality for one of the parties, or a party to the action should not be appointed unless by consent or unless there are special circumstances justifying his appointment in preference to others,[3] as the possession of the receiver appointed under this section is exclusively the possession of the Court.[4]

13. Powers of the Receiver.—A receiver appointed under this section has, subject to the control of the Court all the powers of a receiver appointed under the Code of Civil procedure.[1] Under O. 40, R. 1, the Court may confer on a receiver such powers of management as it thinks fit. In the absence of any limitation on such power prescribed by the Court, the receiver will have all general powers of management including the power to grant leases.[2] Where a receiver obtained permission from the Court to lease the property, without disclosing all the material facts, and granted a lease for an indefinite period in favour of one of the parties, it was held that the granting of such a lease amounted to a fraud practised upon the Court, and that the Court had jurisdiction to set aside the lease deed.[3] A receiver should obtain directions and instructions from the Magistrate, whenever necessary with regard to the management of the property.[4] The receiver has a right to take possession of such property also as has accreted to the original subject matter of the dispute during the attachment.[5]

It was held in the undermentioned case[6] decided before the amendment of 1923, that a receiver of the property appointed by a Civil Court had no power to remove a receiver appointed under this section, as the possession of the Magistrate continued till the matter was decided in a Civil Court, and that the appointment of a receiver, in an interlocutory proceeding was no such decision. This is no longer law under the amended section as the Magistrate has power to appoint a receiver only if no receiver has been appointed by a Civil Court;—and even if a receiver is appointed, such receiver should hand over possession to the receiver who may be subsequently appointed by a Civil Court.

S. 146, Notes 14—17.

14. Remuneration of the Receiver.—The remuneration to be paid to receivers appointed under this section is in the discretion of the Court but should not exceed the total realisations from the property.[1] The remuneration ordinarily fixed for receivers appointed under O. 40, R. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code does not furnish any criterion for the remuneration to be paid to receivers under this section.[2]

15. Disobedience to an order under this section.—Where the Magistrate attaches the property under this section, it passes into the custody of the Court, and any person entering into the land thereafter is liable for the offence of criminal trespass under S. 447, Penal Code. He is not liable to be punished under S. 188, as in the case of an order under S. 145, sub-S. 6.[1]

16. Review.—A Magistrate has no power to review an order under this section passed by himself or by his predecessor[1] except to correct a clerical error.[2] See S. 369, infra, and S. 145, supra.

17. Revision.—See S. 145, supra and S. 435, infra.

Before the Amending Act of 1923, sub-S. (3) to S. 435 provided that orders under Chap. XII of the Code could not be revised under that section, and it was held that orders passed by the Magistrate under this section, could be revised by the High Court under the powers conferred under S. 107 of the Government of India Act[1] though not under S. 435.[2] But where the order was without jurisdiction, the High Court was held not to be precluded by S. 435 from exercising the powers of revision.[3] The omission of sub-S. (3) to S. 435 under the Amending Act of 1923 shows that orders under this section are also open to revision under S. 435.

The High Court is not only competent to set aside an erroneous order but also to pass such orders as should have been made by the Magistrate upon the facts proved at the enquiry.[4] Mere brevity of an order is no ground for interference[5] but if it is shown that the Magistrate failed to give full judicial

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with orders passed by the Magistrate with regard to the management of the property.[7] But where such an order offends against an elementary rule founded on the desire of Courts to place the parties on a footing of absolute equality, the High Court will interfere in revision.[8] directing that such thing shall not be done, as the case may be, until the person objecting to such thing being done or claiming that such thing may be done obtains the decision of a competent Civil Court adjudging him to be entitled to prevent the doing of, or to do, such thing, as the case may be:

Provided that no order shall be passed under this section permitting the doing of anything where the right to do such thing is exerciseable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry; or where the right is exerciseable only at particular seasons, unless the right has been exercised during the season next before such institution.

532. If a dispute arise concerning the right of use of any land or water, or any right of way, such Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction the subject of dispute lies, may inquire into the matter; and if it appears to him that the subject of dispute is open to the use of the public, or of any person or of any class of persons, such Magistrate may order that possession thereof shall not be taken or retained by any one to the exclusion of the public, or of such person, or of such class of persons, as the case may be, until the person claiming such possession shall obtain the decision of a competent Civil Court, adjudging him to be entitled to such exclusive possession.

Disputes concerning right of use of land or water.

Provided that such Magistrate shall not pass any such order, if the matter be such that the right of use is capable of being exercised at all times of the year, unless such right has been ordinarily exercised within three months from the date of the institution of the inquiry; or, in cases where the right of use exists at particular seasons, unless such right has been exercised during the last of such seasons before the complaint.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 320.)

320. If a dispute arise concerning the right of use of any land or water, the Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid within whose jurisdiction the subject of dispute lies, may enquire into the matter, and if it shall appear to him that the subject of dispute is open to the use of the public, or of any person, or of any class of persons, the Magistrate or other Officer may order that possession thereof shall not be taken or retained by any party to the exclusion of the public, or of such person, or of such class of persons, as the case may be, until the party claiming such possession shall obtain the decision of a competent Court adjudging him to be entitled to such exclusive possession. Provided that the Magistrate or other Officer as aforesaid shall not pass any such order if the matter be such that the right of use is capable of being exercised at all times of the year, unless that right shall have been ordinarily exercised within three months from the date of the institution of the enquiry, or in cases where the right of use exists at particular seasons unless such right has been exercised during the last of such seasons before the complaint.

(1) For the words "including any right of way or other easement over the same", the words "whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise" have been substituted. See Note 7, infra.

(2) The words "He may make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute.....claims" in sub-S. (1) are new. See Note 8, infra.

(3) For the words "permitting such thing to be done or directing that such thing shall not be done" the words "prohibiting any interference with such right" in sub-S. (2) have been substituted. See Note 14, infra.

(4) Sub-S. (3) is new. See Note 15, infra.

2. Scope of the section.—Section 145, ante, empowers the Magistrate to take preventive action in respect of disputes concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof. This section relates to disputes regarding rights of user of land or water and empowers the Magistrates to pass temporary orders, until the rights of the parties are decided by a Civil Court. But the Magistrate is not bound to institute proceedings under this section in respect of such a dispute.[1] He can proceed against the parties under S. 107 or under S. 144, especially if an inquiry into such dispute would involve an investigation into complicated questions relating to the title of the parties.[2] But ordinarily, the proper course for the Magistrate to adopt would be to take action under this section, rather than make temporary orders under S. 144 or S. 107 without any inquiry into the respective claims of the parties.[3] S. 147, Notes 2—5.

As has been seen already in S. 145, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to institute proceedings under this chapter is of an exceptional character and therefore the procedure prescribed in the section has to be strictly followed.[4] The procedure to be adopted in respect of the inquiry under this section is the same as that provided in S. 145, ante. As to the effect of non-compliance with the provisions of the section see S. 145, ante.

3. Nature of proceedings under this section.—See Note 5 to S. 145, supra.

The District Magistrate has power to transfer a proceeding under this section under the provisions of Ss. 192 and 528, infra.[1]

4. Who may institute proceedings under this section.—See S. 145, ante.

5. "Is satisfied from Police Report or other information".—See Notes 6—8 to S. 145.

The jurisdiction of the Magistrate to institute proceedings under this section arises on his being satisfied that a dispute exists concerning the right of user of land or water and that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace. Therefore it is his duty to record a finding that he is so satisfied on the materials before him[1] and to draw up a preliminary order stating the grounds which have satisfied him; the fact that the evidence in the subsequent inquiry into the existence of the right, discloses such grounds is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction which he did not possess at the time of the commencement of the proceedings.[2]

Where the Magistrate makes use of the Police Report for the limited purpose of satisfying himself as to the existence of such a dispute it is not necessary for him to examine the Police-officer with regard to the correctness of such report.[3]

6. "Dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace".—In S. 532 of the Code of 1872, (corresponding to this section) the words "likely to cause a breach of the peace" were absent, and it was held in the undermentioned case[1] decided under that section that the dispute contemplated by the section should be some substantial dispute necessitating the interference of criminal authorities and that it was not sufficient if there was only a mere discussion or verbal altercation between the parties in respect of their rights. Under the present section however the Magistrate has to be satisfied not only that a real dispute exists but also that such a dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace.[2] The object of this section is not to provide the parties an alternative to a civil action,[3] or to prevent any mischief or injury to individuals, by reason of any such dispute but to stop public manifestations of the dispute itself.[4] It was held in the undermentioned cases[5] that where the rights of the parties had been determined by the decision of a Civil Court, the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to inquire into a claim which is at variance with the Civil Court's decree, and that the proper course would be to proceed against the aggressive party under S. 107, supra.[6]

7. Right of user of land or water.—As to the meaning of "land or water" see sub-S. (2) to S. 145, ante.

This section is intended to apply only to cases where the dispute relates to the right of user of land or water such as the use of highways, pathways, places of worship, fisheries, ferries and the like, as distinct from disputes concerning immovable property itself for which provision is made under Ss. 145 and 146, ante.[1] The expression land or water is not confined to private property only and is wide enough to include public property such as public roads, streets and pathways.[2] The fact that S. 133, ante provides expressly for the removal of obstruction caused to a public pathway does not bar institution of proceedings under this section if the conditions necessary for the exercise of the jurisdiction under this section are established.[2-a] But the power of the Magistrates to pass orders in respect of such public streets or pathways should not be exercised until it is clearly proved that there is a right by custom or by grant or by statute, in one section of the public to prevent another section of the public from using the public street or pathway on particular occasions or for particular purposes, when such use is ordinarily and prima facie lawful.[3] S. 147, Note 7.

A "right" under this section must be a legal right. If the right claimed is one which the law will not recognize, such as a right to restrain another from fishing in the sea, it cannot be enforced under this section.[3-a]

It has been held that the following rights are rights of user of land or water within the meaning of this section:—

(i) A right to take a car in procession along a public road to a temple.[4]

(ii) A right to enter a temple and perform puja therein, or to worship therein.[5]

(iii) A right to enter a mosque and officiate as Kazi therein.[6]

(iv) A right to bury the dead in a burial ground.[7]

(v) A right to enter a samadhi.[8]

(vi) A right to erect a bund.[9]

(vii) A right to go upon a land of another for the purpose of collecting gratuities for a certain religious purpose.[10]

(viii) A right of way absolute[11] or limited by the exclusion of vehicular traffic.[12]

(xi) A right to let off water by its natural course.[15]

(xii) A right to fish.[16]

(xiii) A right to moor boats and dry fishing nets on the land of another.[17]

(xiv) A right to use the water emanating from the river and running through a particular channel.[18]

(xv) A right to irrigate from a tank.[19]

(xvi) A right to use the water of a well.[20]

(xvii) A right to ply ferries.[21]

A right of privacy is not however a right in the assertion of which a person can be justified in entering the premises of another for the purposes of closing the doors and windows and is therefore not a right of user of any land or water.[22] Similarly the right of a Muhammadan to do worship in the land of another, which is dependent upon the will of such person cannot be enforced under this section.[23]

It has been held that the following rights are not rights of user of land or water within the meaning of this section:—

(i) A right to an undivided share in a property.[24]

(ii) A right to remove sandalwood paste from the person of an idol.[25]

(iii) A right to a dignity or privilege not properly cognizable by a Civil Court.[26]

It has been held that the obstruction of a drain into which the sewage of complainant's premises fell does not come within the terms of the section.[27]

8. "Easement or otherwise".—Previous to the amendment of 1923, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the section had no application to rights not resembling easements, such as a right to perform puja in a tempie or to rights acquired by contract.[1] It was held by the High Court of Madras however, that the section was wide enough to apply to cases of such rights also.[2] The introduction of the words "or otherwise" by the amendment of 1923, gives effect to the Madras view.[2-a]

The word "easement" is not used in the restricted sense in which it is used under the English Law[3] nor is it confined to the right of easement acquired by uninterrupted enjoyment for a period of 20 years as provided by S. 26 of the Limitation Act.[4] For the purposes of this section it is enough if the right existed and was exercised during the last season or within 3 months next before the commencement of the proceedings.[5]

9. Preliminary order in writing.—Before the amendment of 1923 the section contained no specific direction for the drawing up of a preliminary order, and it was held in the undermentioned case[1] that the Magistrate was not bound to record a preliminary order as in the case of a proceeding under S. 145. The amended section now specifically enables the Magistrate to make a preliminary order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied as to the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and requiring the parties concerned in such a dispute to attend his Court and put in written statements of their respective claims to the right in dispute. The preliminary order should direct the parties to attend the Court of the Magistrate making the order; it is not proper to direct the parties to appear before another Magistrate.[2]

10. "Parties concerned in such dispute".—The Magistrate should ascertain and bring on record all such persons as are interested in the right claimed and require them to attend his Court for the purposes of the inquiry into the existence of the right. The proprietor of the land in which a right of way is claimed is a necessary party to a proceeding under this section though such person may not be actually concerned in the dispute.[1] It is not however necessary to implead the person from whom one of the parties derives his title; it is sufficient if the actual claimants are impleaded.[2] The omission to implead necessary parties is however only an irregularity and does not render the proceedings illegal unless prejudice is caused to the parties.[3] But an order passed without the necessary parties on record will not be binding on such parties.[3-a]

The Magistrate has no power to add parties after the commencement of the enquiry.[4] See S. 145, ante.

11. Service of Notice.—The provision as to the service of notice is imperative and the Magistrate should not pass final orders under this section without issuing a notice as required by this section.[1] A notice issued under S. 145, is not a sufficient compliance.[2]

As to the effect of non-service of notice, see S. 145, ante.

12. Inquiry into the existence of the right.—The action taken under this section being of an emergency nature, a lengthy and elaborate inquiry into the rights of the parties is not contemplated. The Magistrate would be justified in passing an order in favour of one party, if he thinks, on a summary inquiry into the rights of the parties that there are reasonable grounds showing the existence of the right in favour of such party.[1] He should not however refer the matter to a Civil Court without any inquiry whatever,[2] but is bound to inquire into the matter in the manner provided under S. 145. That is, he should peruse the statements filed by the parties, hear the parties, receive all such evidence as may be produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence if any as he thinks necessary and decide the question of the existence of such right as claimed by the parties. See S. 145 and the undermentioned cases.[3]

He should not pass an order merely on the ground of the convenience of the parties[4] or on the basis of any private information furnished to him,[5] or on a consideration of sentimental caste objections[6] but should come to a judicial decision on satisfactory proof regarding the rights of the parties.[7]

As the subject-matter of the dispute is a right of user of land or water, the Magistrate cannot pass any order of attachment.[8] He has also no power to pass any interlocutory order restraining the parties from exercising their rights pending the inquiry under this section.[9] If the case is emergent and calls for immediate action, he has power to prevent a breach of the peace by taking action under S. 144, ante.[10]

13. Exercise of the right.—Where the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the right claimed exists, he should also decide and give a finding as to whether such right was exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry, or where the right is exercisable only at particular seasons or occasions, whether it was exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions.[1] It is not however necessary to give such a finding as to the exercise of the right where the Magistrate decides that the right itself does not exist.[2]

It is not necessary that any specific instance of the exercise of the right should be proved where a general continuous exercise of such right is satisfactorily proved.[3] The Magistrate may also draw a presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, that the party having the right of user of the land, also exercised such right in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary.[4] It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the word 'exercise' does not mean "successfully and completely to assert" and that it is sufficient if the person having such right makes even a small gesture in the assertion of such right.[5]

The period of three months has to be calculated from the date of the institution of the inquiry that is from the date the Magistrate draws up formal proceedings and passes the preliminary order after satisfying himself as to the existence of a breach of the peace.[6] It has however been held by the High Court of Patna that the institution of the inquiry could only be the date on which the complainant brings his grievance to the Court and not the date on which the Court draws up the proceedings.[7]

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a person was prevented from exercising his right within the period of three months because of circumstances beyond his control—as by obstruction by the other party—the proviso has no application and the right of such a person may be declared under this section.[8] On the other hand the High Court of Madras has held that there is no justification for the addition of such a condition to the section and that the words of the proviso should be given their plain meaning.[9]

S. 147, Note 14.

14. "Order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right".—Under the section as it stood before 1923, where the Magistrate found that the right claimed existed, he had to pass an order "permitting such thing to be done or directing that such thing should not be done as the case may be" and these words were construed as enabling the Magistrate to pass an order directing a party to do a positive act such as the removal of a bund or fence erected by one party but which interfered with the exercise of the right of the other party.[1] It was also held that in case the party enjoined failed to carry out such order, the Magistrate had power to direct the Police to assist in the removal of such obstruction to the exercise of the right, by the other party.[1-a] By the amendment of 1923, the Magistrate is enabled to pass an order "prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right". Thus while the order under the section before the amendment was directed to the person claiming to be entitled to the right, the order under the present section is directed against the person who is interfering with such right.[2] It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the power of the Magistrate under sub-S. (2) of the amended section is analogous to the power of a Civil Court to grant a temporary injunction restraining a person from doing a certain act—but that the Magistrate has no power to make an order in the nature of a mandatory injunction such as for instance, directing a party to remove an obstruction or bund put up by him.[3] On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras[4] and Patna,[5] that there is no such restriction in the wording of the section itself, and that, an order under this section passed against the person who has placed an obstruction to the enjoyment of the right would place that person in effect, under a duty to remove the obstruction put up by him.

The Magistrate has to prevent arbitrary interference with the right; he has no power to pass a purely declaratory order under this section.[6]

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that where A is ordered not to interfere with the exercise by B of his right of way over the former's land, the removal by B of a fence put up by A obstructing such right is not an act done "otherwise than in due course of law" within the meaning of S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.[7]

15. "Prohibiting the exercise of such right".—Before the amendment of 1923, there was no provision enabling the Magistrate to pass an order prohibiting the exercise of the right, in case he found that such a right did not exist, but it was held nevertheless that the Magistrate had the power to pass a prohibitory order in order to prevent a breach of the peace.[1] The amendment specifically provides that in case the Magistrate finds that such a right as claimed does not exist, he should pass an order prohibiting such party from exercising that right.[2] Where however the Magistrate finds that the right existed, but that it was not exercised within the period of three months or during the last season, he cannot pass a prohibitory order under this section.[3]

16. Decision of a Civil Court.—Sub-S. (4) provides that an order under this section is subject to any subsequent determination of the rights of the parties by a Civil Court, and therefore the remedy of the party aggrieved by the order of the Magistrate is only to bring a civil suit. Where however, the right in dispute is itself not a right that can be adjudicated upon by a Civil Court, the Magistrate has no power to institute proceedings under this section.[1]

17. Conversion of proceedings.—Where the Magistrate institutes proceedings under S. 145 and subsequently discovers that the dispute relates to a right of user of land or water within the meaning of this section, he cannot convert the proceedings into one under this section but should pass a preliminary order as required by this section and provide opportunities to the parties to adduce evidence with regard to the existence of such right.[1] If however he converts the proceeding under S. 145, into one under this section and passes an order thereon, and the parties are not prejudiced thereby, the order will not be set aside in revision.[2]

Similarly a proceeding under S. 133, cannot be converted into a proceeding under this section unless the conditions necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under this section are established and a preliminary order under this section is passed.[3]

18. Revision.—See S. 145, ante.

The High Court will not interfere with a finding of fact arrived at by the Magistrate and the remedy of the person aggrieved by such a finding is to bring a suit in a Civil Court.[1]

(In removing the fence B does not act otherwise than in due course of law).

1. Legislative Changes.—There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.

Changes introduced in 1882—

(1) The words "any Magistrate of the first class" which occurred in S. 553 of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "any District Magistrate, or Sub-Divisional Magistrate".

(2) Paragraphs 2 and 3 corresponding to the present sub-Ss. 2 and 3 were newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898—

The words "consistent with the law for the time being in force" in the first paragraph were omitted.

Changes introduced in 1923—

(1) The words "for witnesses' or pleaders' fees or both" in sub-S. (3) were omitted.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 533.)

Local inquiry to determine boundary dispute.

533. Whenever a local inquiry is necessary for the purposes of this chapter, any Magistrate of the first class may depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to make the inquiry, and may furnish him with such instructions, consistent with the law for the time being in force, as may seem necessary for his guidance, and may declare by whom the whole or any part of the necessary expenses of the inquiry shall be paid.

(CODE OF 1861—Nil.)

S. 148, Notes 1—4.

(2) The words "all costs.....were fines" at the end of the sub-S. (3) were omitted.

(3) The words "such costs.....reasonable" have been newly added.

2. Scope.—This section provides for a local enquiry in proceedings under this Chap. (XII). It is not in every case that a local enquiry should be held.[1] It should be held if it will assist the Magistrate in determining the several points or the boundaries of the property in dispute.[2] The object of a local enquiry is to understand and appreciate the topography of the land in dispute in order to aid the Magistrate in appreciating the evidence offered in Court, as to the main point, i.e., of possession.[3] A local enquiry should not therefore be directed on matters, which may be proved by evidence, e.g., actual possession.[4] An order completely transferring the function of making investigation into the dispute to a subordinate Magistrate is hence an abuse of the power conferred by this section.[5] The order deputing the enquiry must show the necessity for an enquiry.[6]

3. "Local Enquiry"—Meaning of.—A "local enquiry" under this section is not synonymous with "local inspection"; hence a person deputed to hold an enquiry under this section is competent to examine witnesses.[1] But a mere survey of lands, after enquiry from all parties is not a "local enquiry" but merely a ministerial act.[2]

3-a. Ex parte enquiry.—As the report of the enquiry forms part of the proceedings, and the parties thereto are affected by it, such enquiry should not be held ex parte.[1]

4. Who can hold the enquiry.—The section provides that whenever a local enquiry is necessary, a District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to make the enquiry. This, however, does not prevent him from making the inquiry himself.[1] The person deputed to make the enquiry must be a Magistrate and not a Kanungo[2] and such Magistrate must make the inquiry himself and cannot delegate it to somebody else.[3] It has however been held in the undermentioned case[4] that this section is only an enabling one and does not prevent any person being deputed under the general provisions of law to hold an inquiry, though in such cases, such person should come into the witness-box and depose to what he saw. S. 148, Notes 4—5.

A ministerial act, e.g., the survey of the disputed land not being a local enquiry, can be deputed to a pleader, or a commissioner, or an amin, or a Kanungo.[5]

5. Report of the enquiry.—Where a local enquiry has been made under this section, the report of the Magistrate holding the enquiry may be read as evidence and becomes part of the proceedings.[1] The party affected by it is therefore entitled to be acquainted with the result of the enquiry and should be given an opportunity of rebutting the report.[2] It is however doubtful whether the evidence taken by the Magistrate at the enquiry forms part of the record of the proceedings and whether it can be relied upon by the deputing Magistrate.[3] But it has been held that if such evidence is acted upon, without objection from the parties, the Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction[4]; at the least it amounts to a mere irregularity curable by S. 537.[5]

But where the person deputed is not a Magistrate but a Kanungo[6] or an amin,[7] the report does not automatically form part of the record. He must go into the witness-box and give his deposition and then alone his report is admissible under S. 157 of the Evidence Act.[8]

On receipt of the report, the deputing Magistrate must hold further enquiry[9] and cannot base his order merely on the local inspection; he must take evidence tendered by the parties.[10] It has however been held that it is not illegal to act upon the report alone when no evidence is tendered by the parties.[11]

6. Costs—Sub-S. (3).—The powers under the Civil Procedure Code as to costs cannot be imported into criminal proceedings. Costs can be awarded only under the provisions of this Code.[1] Under sub-S. (3) of this section costs can be awarded by the Magistrate who finally disposes of the proceedings. It has been held that the High Court in revision can also pass an order as to costs in the original proceedings as an incidental or consequential order under S. 439 read with S. 423 (d).[2] But there is a difference of opinion as regards the power of the High Court to award costs incurred in the revision proceedings. The High Courts of Bombay and Rangoon take the view that the High Court can pass such an order as a consequential and incidental order.[3] The High Courts of Madras and Allahabad have on the other hand taken a different view.[4] The Rangoon High Court has further held that the question whether an order under sub-S. (3) is consequential or incidental is to be determined upon the circumstances of each case.[5]

Where the original case has been tried by one Magistrate, his successor cannot pass an order for costs[6] though where an order for costs has been passed by the former, the successor can make an assessment thereof.[7]

7. Amount of costs.—Prior to the amendment of this section in 1923, the Magistrate could award costs incurred by the party for witnesses' or pleaders' fees only[1] and had no power to award any other costs, e.g., a sum for the damages to the crops,[2] or a penalty paid by a party on a document not properly stamped.[3]

But in view of the amendment, the power, of awarding costs is extended to award other incidental costs also, the costs for witnesses, and pleaders' fees being included therein. Hence the cases prior to 1923 deciding that the Court could not award more than costs for witnesses' or pleaders' fees are no longer good law.

Under this section, only the costs incurred by the party either in whole or in part can be awarded.[3-a] Hence it follows that the order should be passed after due enquiry into the amounts of costs incurred.[4] The sum awarded need not however be arrived at after exact calculation.[5] It should only be a reasonable sum,[6] after considering the number of witnesses and the number of hearings.[7] The scale however should not be too liberal.[8] The value of the property in dispute is not a sure test in assessing costs.[9]

8. When order for costs should be made.—An order awarding costs should ordinarily be passed simultaneously with the final order on the merits.[1] The actual assessment may be made subsequently.[2] But sometimes it is not possible to pass an order at the time of the final order, in which case the Magistrate may reserve judgment as to costs.[3] But the order must be made within a reasonable time and cannot be passed after great delay.[4]

9. For and against whom order can be passed.—The section authorises the Magistrate to pass an order for costs only against the parties to the proceedings. No order can therefore be passed against a person who is not a party.[1] Where a party has substantially succeeded, it is but proper that the opposite party, who had wrongfully dispossessed the former, should pay the costs of the former.[2] The mere fact that a party took little interest in the proceedings does not absolve him from liability when the complainant was compelled to make him a party on account of his denial of the complainant's right to possession.[3] Such order can be passed even in favour of the legal representatives of the successful party.[4]

10. Notice.—When an order awarding costs is passed simultaneously with the final order on the merits, no notice to the parties is necessary.[1] Where, however, the Magistrate reserves judgment without mentioning at any time when the parties are before him, that he intends to make an order as to costs, notice must be given to the party against whom such order is to be passed.[2] If such an order is passed ex parte, the Court acts without jurisdiction.[3] A contrary view namely that an ex parte order, if passed after considering the application on the merits, is not invalid has been expressed in the undermentioned case.[4] S. 148, Notes 10—12.

11. Recovery of costs.—In spite of the omission of the last sentence of this section by the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1913, the costs awarded under this section are to be recovered as fines. (See S. 547 of the Code). A party to the proceedings cannot bring a civil suit for the recovery of costs awarded or refused by an order under this section.[1] A suit by a witness in such proceedings for his costs against the party for whom he appeared is however maintainable.[2] When an order awarding costs has been made by a Magistrate, neither he nor his successor can refuse to recover the costs on the ground of long delay.[3] Such order though passed ex parte cannot subseqently be set aside.[4] There is no discretion given to the Magistrate by this section or S. 386 to refuse to recover the costs.[5]

12. Revision.—According to the Code prior to 1923, proceedings under Chap. XII were no proceedings within the meaning of S. 435. Hence no revision could be entertained on an order under S. 148.[1] But this provision has now been omitted from the present S. 435 and hence an order under S. 148 is now revisable. Where the trial Court ordered a party as well as a non-party to the proceedings to pay costs and the High Court quashed the order on the ground that no costs can be awarded against a non-party, the record was sent back to the trial Court for assessing the costs against the party to the proceeding, on the ground that it was the trial Court that was in a better position to exercise discretion.[2] As the award of costs under S. 148 is in the discretion of the trial Magistrate the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion so exercised.[3] Nor will it interfere in the absence of sufficient materials for arriving at the costs ordered by the trial Court.[4]

SYNOPSIS.

SCOPE AND OBJECT OF THE CHAPTER AND SECTION .. Note No. 1
"INTERPOSE"—MEANING OF 2

1. Scope and object of the Chapter and Section.—Section 23 of the Police Act (V of 1861) empowers every police-officer to prevent the commission of all offences and public nuisances.[1] This section empowers a police-officer to prevent the commission of cognizable offences.[2] This chapter and the next are not mutually exclusive. It cannot be said that because a police-officer is investigating under Chap. XIV, therefore he is not doing anything under this chapter or vice versa. On the contrary preventive action started under this chapter may lapse into investigation under Chap. XIV.[3] But a power to prevent the commission of an offence does not include a power to remove certain banners from a Hindu procession on the ground that such carrying being obnoxious to Mahomedans would, if allowed, produce a breach of the peace.[4] Similarly a police-officer is not justified under this chapter in removing an axe carried by a person under the impression that such person was carrying it on his way to attack his enemy.[5] This section does not empower a police-officer to pass any order either against the person from whom an offence is apprehended or against the would-be victims of the offence. Such wide powers cannot be said to have been contemplated by the legislature under this section.[6]

2. "Interpose"—Meaning of.—The word "interpose" connotes the idea of actively intervening and not merely a prohibition by word of mouth. A police-officer cannot shirk his duty of interposing effectively by being content with passing an oral order not to do a certain act.[1]

1. Arrest without emergency is illegal.—Sections 54 and 55, ante enact that a police-officer can arrest without warrant in certain cases. This section empowers such officer to arrest without warrant any person designing to commit a cognizable offence. Such an arrest, can, however, be made only when the commission of the offence cannot otherwise be prevented. If, without emergency, an arrest is made under this section, such arrest is illegal.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

There is no material difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 in this respect.

(2) Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The word "place" was substituted for the words "Shop or premises" which occurred in the Code of 1872.

(3) There is no difference between the Codes of 1882 and this Code in this respect.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section specifically authorises an officer in charge of a Police-station to enter any place within the limits of such station for the purpose of inspecting or searching for any weights or measures under the circumstances mentioned in the section.[1] As to under what circumstances a person will be guilty of an offence relating to weights and measures, see Ss. 264 to 267 of the Penal Code and the undermentioned case.[2]

3. "If he finds . . . any weights . . . are false".—Before coming to a conclusion that any weight or measure is false there must be some standard weight or measure prescribed by lawful authority or generally recognised by custom.[1] To assume indiscriminately, that some shop keeper's weight is the correct one and proceed for comparison is not proper.[2] Some reasonable allowance should always be made for wear and tear and for the rough and ready methods of bazaar shopkeepers.[3] Where a five seer weight was found to be short by one tola it was held that it could not be regarded as a false weight.[4]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in the Code of 1872—

(1) The words "every complaint preferred" were substituted for the words "every complaint or information preferred" which occurred in the Code of 1861.

(2) The words "and shall be signed, sealed or marked by the person making it" were newly added.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882—

(1) The words "every information relating to the commission of a cognisable offence is given orally to an officer in charge of a police-station" were substituted for the words "every complaint preferred to an officer in charge of a police-station".

(2) The words "by him or under his direction and be read over to the informant" were added after the words "shall be reduced into writing."

(3) Before the words "shall be signed" the words "and every such information whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid" were added.

(4) The words "sealed or marked" were omitted.

(5) The words "in such form as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf" were substituted for the words "in the form prescribed by the Local Government".

There is no difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.

2. Scope and object of the section.—This chapter deals with the powers of the police to investigate into the following classes of cases:—

(1) Where information is received as to the commission of a cognisable offence (S. 154).

(2) Where information is received as to the commission of a non-cognisable offence (S. 155), and

(3) Where information is received that a person has committed suicide or has been killed by another or by an animal or by machinery or by accident or has died under circumstances raising a suspicion that an offence has been committed (S. 174).

One of the modes by which a person aggrieved may put the criminal law into motion is by giving information under this section.[1] The information so given is called the "first information". It is the basis upon which an investigation is commenced under this chapter.[2] The object of this section is threefold, firstly to inform the Magistrate of the District and the District Superintendent of Police who are responsible for the peace and safety of the District of the offences reported at the station.[3] Secondly to make known to the judicial officers before whom the case is ultimately tried, what are the facts given out immediately after the occurrence and on what materials the investigation commenced[4] and thirdly to safeguard the accused against subsequent variations or additions.[5]

3. What is first information.—The information recorded under this section is known as "first information" though the word "first" is not mentioned in the Code.[1] It is usually given by the complainant or by somebody on his behalf.[2] It is of very great importance to determine whether a statement falls under this section or not: for if a statement is one made under this section it is admissible in evidence (Vide Note 10); but if it is one coming under S. 162, infra, it cannot be used save for the purpose mentioned therein. As the word "first" indicates, that information is "first information" which is given first in point of time[3] and on which the investigation is commenced by the police.[4] All statements recorded subsequent to the starting of the investigation fall under S. 162, infra.[5] Where, therefore, the information does not indicate or disclose the commission of a cognisable offence and no formal investigation is commenced thereon such information does not fall under this section, nor would statements recorded by the police till they commence the investigation come within the provisions of S. 162, infra.[6] As observed by Mr. Justice Ayling in In re Nandamuri Anandayya.[7] "The police must frequently hear of alleged offences from less reliable sources, i.e., village gossip, etc. In such cases it is discretionary with the officer to take action or not and before deciding as to the course to adopt, he may frequently deem it well to make a few preliminary and informal enquiries as to whether there is anything in what he has heard to render a formal investigation desirable." Such preliminary inquiries do not become "investigation" by the police and if, during the preliminary inquiries, the police-officer receives a statement from a reliable source confirming the suspicion, this latter statement is the real first information and it does not fall under S. 162, infra.

Illustrations.

The Police arrive at the village, take a statement from A and get it signed by A. The latter statement of A falls under S. 162, infra. The first information is that given by B.[8]

(b) A person informed the Police that he saw a woman in a field with her throat cut. The Police did not record this; but treated the information lodged by the woman's father given subsequently as the first information. It was held that the former information was the first information and the latter only a statement under S. 162, infra.[9]

(c) A, the wife of the deceased, informed the Police about the disappearance of her husband and of her suspicion of foul play. This statement was not recorded. The Police investigated, and after discovery of the dead body drew up a ruqa which the Police entered as the first information. Held, that the ruqa was not the first information under this section.[10]

(d) A reports to the Police that he saw a mob of armed men going towards a certain place. This is not first information.[11] There is no information of any offence in such a case.

The Police directed her to search for S in her usual resorts. On the 25th of December K returned to the Police and informed them that S was not to be found. On the 26th the Sub-Inspector of Police found one of the accused and on questioning him suspected that an offence had been committed. He took the statement of K (a third statement by her) and this was treated as the first information. Held, that since the first two statements did not disclose a cognizable offence, the third statement on the 26th was rightly treated as the first information and that it did not come within S. 162, infra.[12]

Telegrams and telephonic messages are not informations under this section, since they are neither given orally to Police-officer and reduced to writing by him, nor given in writing signed by the informant.[14] So if after the receipt of the telegram or telephonic message, the Police proceed to the spot and take down the information from the complainant or informant and get it signed, this latter is the first information.[15]

The operation of this section cannot be evaded by the Police choosing to record as first information a statement obtained after the investigation has commenced[16] and getting the statement signed contrary to the provisions laid down under S. 162, infra.[17] The Police-officer should not wait till he had some good reason to believe that a cognisable offence has been committed to record an information; it is enough if there is a reasonable suspicion that a crime has been perpetrated.[18]

In every case it is for the Court to decide whether a statement in question falls under this section or under S. 162.[19]

4. "Relating to the commission of a cognisable offence".—The conditions as to the record of an information under this section are first that it must be an information and secondly it must relate to a cognisable offence on the face of it and not merely in the light of subsequent events. The mere fact that an information is first in point of time is not sufficient.[1] As to what are cognisable offences see S. 4 (f) and Schedule II of the Code.

S. 154, Notes 4—7.

Where information is given to the Police of a non-cognisable offence, the Police-officer should proceed under S. 155, infra.

The word "relating" means that there need not be complete or satisfactory proof or evidence given at the time; it is sufficient if the information given indicates that a cognisable offence has been committed. But until there is this indication it cannot be said that the information is one "relating to" such an offence.[2]

5. "Shall be reduced to writing by him and read over".—This section imposes a duty upon the Police-officer to record the information given to him orally; and after recording the same to read it over to informant. It is in the interest of the Public that the statements should be recorded faithfully and truly.[1] The Police-officer is bound to record the information at once. A statement recorded several days after the occurrence and after there has been development is no first information.[2] Further the information must be taken as the informant gives it; it becomes valueless if it is drawn up by some other person: thus a first information drawn up by a Police-officer and finally settled by an attorney is not a "first information".[3]

But though the Police-officer is bound to take down the information given, a refusal to do so will not give a cause of action for filing a suit for damages against the officer.[4] But if the Police-officer makes a false record, etc., he will be liable to punishment. (Vide Note 15).

The mere fact that a Police-officer does not record a statement, which is in fact a "first information" will not make it any the less a first information; nor does his recording a statement which is not a first information, impress it with the character of a "first information". Vide Note 3, (what is first information).

6. "Shall be signed by the person giving it".—The law requires that the first information should be signed by the person giving it so that there may be a guarantee as to its correctness.[1] The informant cannot in such a case easily or freely deny having made such statements. In cases where such information is false the informants are liable to be prosecuted for an offence under the Penal Code (Vide Note 14). It may be remarked that this is the only section by which the Police-Officer can compel informant to sign.[2] Statements under S. 162, need not be signed by the persons making them. A refusal to sign the statement made under this section is punishable as an offence under S. 180 of the Penal Code.

7. "Officer in charge of a Police Station".—For the definition of "officer in charge of a Police station" Vide S. 4 (p), supra. This section does not apply unless the information is given to an officer in charge of a police station. Thus an information given to a Police-officer who is on tour and who is not an officer in charge of a police station[1] or one given to a Magistrate[2] does not come within this section. A Magistrate cannot direct the police to treat a complaint presented to him as the first information.[3]

Under S. 551, infra, Police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a police station have the same powers as the officer in charge of a police station. So an information given to a Deputy Superintendent of Police of a murder during a rebellion, is first information under this section and is therefore admissible in evidence.[4]

This section does not lay down that information of the commission of a cognisable offence could be given only to the officer in charge of a police station who has territorial jurisdiction under S. 156 to investigate into the case. The officer in charge of any police station can receive such a statement; but the Code is silent as to the procedure to be adopted by the officer in such a case; evidently he has to receive such statement and forward it to the officer of a station who will have jurisdiction to investigate into the offence.[5]

8. "To be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the Local Government may prescribe.—S. 44 of the Police Act (5 of 1861) lays down "it shall be the duty of every officer in charge of a police station to keep a general diary in such form as shall from time to time be prescribed by the Local Government and to record therein all complaints, and charges preferred, the names of all persons arrested, the names of complainants, the offences charged against them, the weapons or property that shall have been taken from their possession or otherwise and the names of witnesses who shall have been examined." Various Local Governments have prescribed the form mentioned in this section. After recording the information when given orally to him, the officer in charge of the police station has again to write the substance of it in his general diary.

It has to be noted that this diary is different from the one mentioned in S. 172, infra.

9. Importance of first information.—The "first information" is the basis of the case: it puts the police in action: it represents the case set up by the informant at that time.[1] It has therefore to be very carefully scrutinised[2] especially in regard to the following particulars:—

(a) Delay in giving the information.—The Courts have always viewed the information with grave suspicion when there has been delay in giving it. People very often try to foist crimes committed by some persons known or unknown on the personal enemies of the informants, after consultation with other people; and in many cases people charged with offences have been acquitted because of the suspicion arising from the delay in giving the information.[3] If therefore there is no satisfactory explanation for such delay, it is fatal to the prosecution.[4]

(b) Non-mention of names of accused.—Where the complainant who has been injured, or any other eye-witness, having had opportunities to see the offenders and who are known to the complainant or witness, gives the first information, and in doing so omits the names of certain persons who are later on placed on their trial by the police before the Courts, such omission will be a circumstance in favour of the accused.[5] Of course, the absence of the names of the accused by itself is not sufficient proof of his innocence[6] but in such cases the Courts have demanded other convincing evidence to convict the accused.[7] On the other hand, the mere fact that the name of the accused finds a place in the first information is not a presumptive proof of his guilt. Thus in rioting cases it will be safe to charge all the persons mentioned in the first information inasmuch as friends and the relations of the culprits are more often implicated in such cases.[8]

(c) Non-mention of the names of witnesses.—The fact that no eye-witness is mentioned in the first information and a number of them are brought forward later on, as having witnessed the occurrence, is a suspicious circumstance against the prosecution case especially when the informant knew that there were eye-witnesses and their names.[9] But when there is independent and reliable testimony that a witness not named in the information was present during the occurrence there is no reason to reject it on the sole ground that the witness's name was not so mentioned.[10]

The fact that witnesses are mentioned in the first information but are not examined at the trial on behalf of the prosecution does not of itself give rise to a presumption under S. 114, Ill. (g) of the Evidence Act against the prosecution.[11] The presumption, will, however arise where it is clear that the person mentioned knew the facts, was willing and able to give relevant evidence and has been kept back.[12]

(d) Difference between the statements in the information and in the evidence given in Court.—The object of the first information is to make known what the case of the informant is against the alleged offenders at the earliest opportunity, when the occurrence took place; so if at the trial a story is given against the alleged offenders which differs in material particulars from the one given in the information, it has always been viewed with grave suspicion and the accused have been given the benefit of doubt arising from such contradictions and discrepancies.[13]

The first information need not, however, contain minute details[14] nor is it the last word in the prosecution case.[15] "We ought not to view" said Maclean, C.J., in Nazir Jharudar v. Emperor, 9 Cal. W.N., "too narrowly the terms of the first information which is perhaps given under circumstances of haste and without knowledge of the true facts."

10. How to use F.I.R.—The first information report is not a substantive or primary evidence in the case. It cannot be substituted for evidence given on oath and when there is no other evidence, the facts mentioned in the information alone cannot be relied upon to convict the accused.[1] It is misdirection on the part of a judge to ask the jury to accept the statement in the first information in preference to the evidence in the case.[2] As has been pointed out by Beasley, C.J., in Sankaralinga Thevan In re:[3] "If a witness in a Sessions trial makes a statement different to that attributed to that witness in the first information report that discredits the evidence of the witness to that extent in the Sessions Court but does not make the statement in the first information report the evidence upon that matter in the case". It has therefore been held in numerous cases that the first information can be used only to corroborate or contradict the evidence under Ss. 157 and 145 of the Indian Evidence Act.[4] "The usual course is for the prosecution to call the informant and for the first information to be tendered as corroboration under S. 157 of the Evidence Act but it could also be tendered in a proper case under S. 32 (1) (of the Evidence Act) as a declaration as to the cause of the informant's death, or as part of the informant's conduct (of the res gestae) under S. 8. Theoretically the defence could prove the information to impeach the informant's credit under S. 155 or to contradict him under S. 145.[5] See also cases cited below.[6]

Unless the informant is examined, the information cannot be put in evidence[7] and an information which is based entirely upon hearsay cannot be tendered in evidence by the prosecution.[8] On the same principle, in a case where the accused are tried under S. 401 of the Penal Code as belonging to a gang of cattle lifters, the Police-officers cannot be allowed to prove that reports were made to them on prior occasions against some of the accused of their having stolen cattle.[9] A map prepared by the police on information is inadmissible in evidence.[10] But care should be taken to see that only "first information" is used in evidence. As has already been stated, if statements are received by the police after the investigation commences, they fall only under S. 162, infra and statements under S. 162, cannot be used to corroborate the prosecution. They can be used only to the extent and in the manner mentioned in S. 162. Vide Notes under that section. The real first information should be found and that alone is admissible[11] under this section. S. 154, Notes 10—12.

An information recorded under this section is a public document and a certified copy of it is admissible in evidence.[12]

11. First Information by accused.—It frequently happens that persons after committing an offence proceed to the Police station and there report the matter to the officers concerned, who take down such statements as the first information under this section. The question arises as to whether and how far the statements are admissible against the informant who later on stands accused. It has been held that by reason of the provisions contained in S. 25 of the Indian Evidence Act such statements are inadmissible in evidence if they are in the nature of confessions.[1] But if the statement made by the accused in the information does not amount to a confession, it is admissible.[2] In Emperor v. Lalit Mohan,[3] an old man of 50 murdered his young wife aged 16, suspecting her of infidelity and reported the matter to the police after the occurrence. In his report, he gave a history of the facts previous to the date of occurrence and which prompted him to do the deed. It was held by their Lordships that the preliminary narrative was admissible against the accused if proved. Similarly it has been held in a Privy Council Case that a report made by A to the Police that B has beaten him is not a confession and is admissible against A in his trial for having murdered B's wife the same day a short time before.[4] But the Bombay High Court has, in a recent case expressed a doubt as to the admissibility of portions of a confession.[5]

12. Duty of the prosecution to tender F.I.R. in evidence.—The prosecution is bound by practice to produce in Court the first information given to the Police and recorded by them.[1] Being the earliest version of the occurrence, it has always to be placed before the Judge and the jury in order to judge of the truth or falsity of the case[2] and it has been held that the failure to record such statement or the non-production of the information has very serious consequences as it prejudices the accused and deprives him of the right of cross-examination.[3]

But the prosecution is not strictly bound down to the case in the first information. It is never per se a statement of the case for the prosecution[4] and the Police can show that the first information is not accurate.[5]

13. Grant of copies of first information.—The accused is entitled to have a copy of the information but he can have it only under an order of a Court of competent jurisdiction or of an officer superior to an officer in charge of a Police station. The officer in charge of a Police station is prohibited from giving such copies or any other private information of such report to any private individual. A violation of this rule is punishable under S. 29 of the Police Act, V of 1861. In the undermentioned case[1] a Head-Constable was tried for giving a copy of the information to a private individual, and was convicted for 6 weeks for offences under S. 409 or in the alternative under S. 379 of the Penal Code and under S. 29 of Act V of 1861. Chapman, J., of the Patna High Court set aside the conviction under S. 409 or under S. 379 but upheld the conviction under S. 29 of Act V of 1861 and reduced the sentence and in doing so observed as follows: "It might be well for the Local Government to consider whether facility should not be given to accused persons to obtain copies from the Police of first information at least even before the trial commences in the Magistrate's Court. It is vitally necessary that an accused person should be granted a copy of the first information at the earliest possible stage in order that he may get the benefit of legal advice. To put difficulties in the way of his obtaining such a copy is only creating a temptation in the way of officers who are in possession of the original."

14. Effect of giving false information under this section— (a) Criminal Liability.—A person giving information to an officer in charge of a Police station under this section can be prosecuted for an offence punishable under S. 182 or S. 211 of the Penal Code, if such information is found to be false.[1]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether a false charge to the Police falls under the second part of S. 211 of the Penal Code or not. See the undermentioned cases.[2]

A gives an information to the Police. It is referred as false. A presses his case before the Magistrate. Can A be prosecuted under S. 182 or S. 211 before the Magistrate disposes of his case? No, according to the undermentioned decisions.[3] Yes, according to the following decisions.[4] The former view is more in consonance with natural justice and equity and gives A an opportunity to prove the truth of his case, before he is sought to be prosecuted for offences under S. 182 or S. 211 for giving false information. Before the Magistrate disposes of the complaint in a legal way steps should not be taken under S. 211 or S. 182. A mere expression of suspicion, without any definite charge will not make a person liable to prosecution.[5]

A person can be charged for abetment if he instigates another to give false information.[6] If the false information is given to the Police to screen an offender the informant is liable to be punished under S. 201 and S. 203 of the Penal Code.[7]

15. Effect of the Police-Officer in charge recording first information falsely.—If the informant has a duty to give true information to the police-officer, the latter has an equal obligation laid on him to record it correctly and truthfully. If he fails to do so, he is liable to be punished under Ss. 177 and 218 of the Penal Code.[1] If the Police-officer in his false report makes any defamatory statements, the aggrieved person can also prosecute him under S. 500 of the Penal Code.[2]

Investigation into non-cognizable cases.

No Police-officer shall investigate a non-cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case, or commit the same for trial, or of a Presidency Magistrate.

Any Police-officer receiving such order may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation (except the power to arrest without warrant) as an officer in charge of a Police-station may exercise in a cognizable case.

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 110, 111 and 113.)

What offences Police may not investigate.

110. A Police-officer may not, without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class, investigate an offence not cognizable by the Police.

A Magistrate of the first or second class may, as provided in sections 24 and 26, order the Police to investigate; and, on receipt of an order to investigate a non-cognizable case, a Police-officer may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation as in a cognizable case.

Saving of powers vested in Police by special or local law.

111. Nothing in section 110 shall be held to interfere with the exercise of any powers vested in a Police-officer by any special or local law, or with the performance of any duty which is imposed upon a Police-officer by any such special or local law.

Complaint in non-cognizable cases.

113. If a complaint is preferred to an officer in charge of a Police-station, of the commission within his local jurisdiction of an offence which is not cognizable by the Police, the Police-officer shall enter the substance of it in the station diary, and shall refer the complainant to the Magistrate.

Preliminary enquiry by the Police.

Police-officers to make enquiry into certain offences only when directed to do so by Magistrate.

133. No Police-officer shall, without an express order from a Magistrate, enquire into or take cognizance of any offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code, other than the offences described in Column 3 of the Schedule annexed to this Act, as offences for which a Police-officer may arrest without warrant. But it shall be competent to a Magistrate, upon the report of a Police-officer or otherwise, to direct enquiry to be made by

1. Applicability of the section to Presidency Towns.—S. 1 of the Code enacts that in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary nothing in the Code shall apply to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay. The use of the word "Presidency Town" in sub-S. (2) of this section has been held to be a "specific provision to the contrary" and that consequently this section will apply to the towns of Calcutta and Bombay.[1] The section so far as it applies to the police in the town of Bombay has however, been repealed by S. 2 of the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902 (Act 4 of 1902).

2. Procedure when information is given.—When information is given to an officer in charge of a Police-station of the commission within the limits of such station of an offence whether cognizable or non-cognizable it is the duty of such officer to enter the substance of such information in the book kept for that purpose.[1] Failure to enter or entering such information falsely is an offence punishable under S. 177 of the Penal Code.[2] The object of the section is to inform the Magistrate of the District and the District Superintendent of Police of the offences which have been reported at the Thana.[3]

The information given to the Police-officer in respect of a non-cognizable offence cannot amount to an institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of S. 211, Penal Code.[4] nor can a charge under S. 182 of the Penal Code be brought against the informant on the ground that such information was false[5] as the Police-officer has no power to take any proceedings by himself in such cases without an express order from a Magistrate.[6]

After entering such information in the diary the Police-officer should refer the informant to the Magistrate.[7] He may in addition also report the case to the Magistrate for orders under sub-S. (2).[8]

3. Sub-Section (2)—Who can order an investigation.—The Magistrates who can order an investigation under this section are—

(1) Magistrates of the first or second class having power to try such cases or commit them for trial, and

(2) Presidency Magistrates.

The words "having power to try" mean only possessing the power to try and should not be confused with the exercise of that power. Hence, a District Magistrate can order an investigation into a case under S. 294-A, Penal Code, even though such offence cannot be tried without a complaint from the Local Government or an officer empowered by the Government in this behalf.[1]

4. Order for investigation.—It is open to the Magistrate to order an investigation under this section when he receives a police report in a non-cognisable case and has reason for doubting its correctness[1] and if he does so the Police-officer is bound to make the investigation.[2]

But it is only under the orders of a Magistrate that the police can investigate into a non-cognisable offence.[3] Thus he cannot in such a case under S. 165, infra, enter a house and make a search.[4]

An order for investigation under this section can be made not only in respect of offences under the Penal Code but also in respect of offences under any local or special law.[5]

It has been held that an order by the District Magistrate to an officer of the Criminal Investigation Department to make a confidential enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether any grounds exist for instituting criminal proceedings is not an order for investigation under this section.[6]

5. Powers and duties of the Police under Sub-S. (3).—Investigation under this chapter includes investigation under sub-S. (3) of this section.[1] A Police-officer empowered under the sub-section to investigate can thus exercise the powers conferred by S. 161,[2] record statements under S. 162,[3] make a search under S. 165,[4] and send up a charge sheet or report that the evidence is insufficient.[5] It is the duty of such officer to keep a diary of the proceedings in investigation under S. 172.[6] After the investigation he should send in a report of the investigation under S. 173 even if the order of the Magistrate is silent as to such report.[7] But the power to arrest without warrant is expressly taken away by this section.[8] If he arrests without a warrant, it will be illegal.[9]

It has been doubted in the undermentioned case[10] whether a Police-officer appointed to investigate under this section can delegate his authority to another.

1. Legislative Changes.—Sub-S. (3) is new and was not found in the Code of 1882.

2. "Cognizable case."—The power to investigate under this section is not limited to offences only. It extends to any cognizable case, e.g., where a person has been arrested under S. 55 (c).[1] Nor is the power limited by any condition that the Police-officer should have something written before he can take action in respect of an offence of which he can take cognizance without the order of a Magistrate.[2]

3. Officer in charge of a Police-station.—The section authorises an officer in charge of a Police-station to make an investigation in any cognizable case. Under S. 551, infra, Police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a Police-station can exercise the same powers of investigation as can Powers of the Police to investigate.

What offences Police-officer may investigate.

109. An officer in charge of a Police-station may, without order of a Magistrate, investigate any offence cognizable by the Police.

Police-officers shall investigate offences committed within the local limits of their jurisdiction; but they may investigate offences committed outside of those limits, in cases in which a Magistrate might, under the provisions of Chapter VI, inquire into an offence not committed within his district.

No such proceeding shall, at any stage, be called in question on the ground that such offence was not committed within such officer's local jurisdiction.

be exercised by an officer in charge of a Police-station. An Inspector of the Provincial Criminal Investigation Department is an officer superior in rank to an officer in charge of a Police-station and can make an investigation under this section.[1] If the officer in charge of the Police-station is ill, the next in rank, and in charge of the station then, could investigate, even though he is not generally empowered to investigate cognizable cases.[2] In serious cases of rioting, etc., it is desirable that investigation is made by a senior officer.[3] As to the power of an Inspector of the Criminal Investigation Department to investigate offences, see the undermentioned case.[4]

3-A. Territorial limits to the power of investigation.—Where a girl is taken away from her husband's house in District M and is brought to District D, a Magistrate at D will have jurisdiction under S. 181 to inquire into the offence (kidnapping). Hence, the police at D can investigate into the crime under this section.[1]

4. Irregularities in investigation—Sub-S. 2.—Sub-S. (2) provides that no proceeding of a Police-officer shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered to investigate. A conviction or acquittal does not depend upon the question what particular officer actually conducts the investigation which results in the trial. That is determined mainly by the evidence that is given at the trial and considered.[1]

The failure properly to investigate cannot vitiate the trial. If there is anything suspicious in the investigation it is for the Court to consider the same in determining the truth of the charge.[2]

5. Order for investigation—Sub-S. (3).—Where no complaint has been made to a Magistrate, but the latter gets information in respect of any cognizable case he may under the provisions of sub-S. (3) of this section order the Police to investigate into it.[1] But where a complaint has been made in respect of any offence and the Magistrate taking cognizance thereof considers, before the issue of process to the accused, that the matter should be investigated, he should order such investigation under the provisions of S. 202, infra, and not under this sub-section.[2] The reason is that this sub-section does not provide an alternative procedure to that laid down in S. 202.[3] The mere fact, however, that a complaint has been made to a Magistrate in respect of a cognizable case does not affect the powers of the Police to make an investigation under sub-S. (1) of this section independent of any order from a Magistrate.[4] S. 156. Notes 5—7.

6. Sessions Judge—Power to order investigation.—A Sessions Judge is not a Magistrate empowered under S. 190 and cannot direct the Police under sub-S. (3) to make an investigation.[1]

7. Powers and duties of the Police in investigation.—It is the duty of the Police in making an investigation to discover the truth and not simply to obtain evidence for the purpose of securing a conviction.[1] The power conferred must be used with caution. The police in conducting the investigation must act in such a way as to inspire full confidence in everybody concerned.[1-a] A general power to enter indiscriminately into houses in the neighbourhood of the place where a cognizable offence may have been committed is not contemplated by this section.[2] The number of investigations into a crime is not limited by law and where one has been completed another may be begun on fresh information received.[3] The investigating officer is a material witness for the prosecution and his non-production is a serious omission which cannot but throw suspicion on the whole prosecution case.[4] But he cannot be regarded as unbiassed, and it is desirable that the investigating officer corroborates the result of his investigation by independent evidence.[5] The practice of engineering an offence, by an investigating officer, in order to find out whether a person when tempted will commit an offence is to be strongly deprecated.[6]

(CODE OF 1861—Ss. 135, 136, 137.)

135. Upon complaint or information being preferred to an officer in charge of a Police-station of the commission within the limits of such station of any of the offences specified in Column 3 of the Schedule annexed to this Act, as offences for which Police-officers may arrest without warrant, he shall send immediate intimation to the Magistrate having jurisdiction, and shall proceed in person, or shall depute one of his subordinate officers to proceed to the spot to enquire into the facts and circumstances of the case, and to take such measures as may be necessary for the discovery and apprehension of the offender.

Upon complaint preferred, Officer in charge of Police-station to proceed in person or depute a subordinate Officer to make enquiry.

* * * * * * *

136. Provided that, when any complaint is made against any person by name, and the case is not of a serious nature, it shall not be incumbent on the officer in charge of a Police-station to proceed in person or to depute a subordinate officer to make an enquiry on the spot, unless such local enquiry shall appear to be necessary.

Except in cases not of a serious nature where local enquiry not necessary.

137. If on any complaint or information being preferred to an officer in charge of a Police-station, it shall appear to such officer that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an enquiry, or that the immediate apprehension of the accused is not necessary for the ends of justice, he shall abstain from proceeding in the case and shall report the substance of the complaint or information for the orders of the Magistrate.

If officer in charge of Police-station see no sufficient ground for an enquiry.

S. 157, Notes 1—6.

1. Legislative changes.—Before the amendment of the section in 1923 the wording of the section was similar to that of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882. By the amending Act of 1923 the following changes were introduced into the section:—

(a) The words "not being below.....in this behalf" and the words "and, if necessary to take measures" were inserted in sub-S. (1).

(b) The words "and, in the case mentioned.....in Cl. (b)..... cause it to be investigated" were added in sub-S. (2).

2. Scope of the section.—The section provides the manner in which investigation is to be conducted where the commission of a cognizable offence is suspected and further authorises an officer in charge of a Police-station not to investigate if he considers that there is no sufficient ground for such investigation and regulates his procedure in such cases.[1]

This section does not apply to the City of Bombay and Calcutta.[2] [See also S. 1, supra.]

3. "From information received."—The words "from information received" refer to the information furnished and recorded under S. 154.[1]

As to what is "information" within the meaning of S. 154, see Note 3, thereto.

4. "Or otherwise".—The words "or otherwise" are wide enough to include every source of information other than that furnished and recorded under S. 154. They will even include information derived from a telegram or village gossip.[1] It was held in the undermentioned case[2] that where the Police came to know of a complaint which had been made to a Magistrate, it is sufficient on which they could proceed to investigate. See also the cases cited below.[3]

5. "He shall forthwith send a report.....to the Magistrate."—This section provides for the making of a report by the Police to the Magistrate before investigation. This is called an "occurrence report."[1] S. 173, infra, provides for the submitting of a report after the investigation is completed. S. 174 provides for sending of an inquest report in cases of death under the circumstances specified in that section.

The object of the report under this section is to enable a Magistrate to have early information of every serious crime so that he may be in a position to act if necessary under S. 159.[2]

6. Effect of not sending the "occurrence report."—The section is mandatory and the sending of the "occurrence report" is a step which is an essential preliminary to an investigation. The failure to send such report is a serious neglect of duty and is likely to result in failure of justice, as it lays the police open to the suspicion of concocting false evidence.[1] The omission cannot, however, vitiate a trial in the absence of prejudice to the accused.[2]

7. "To investigate the facts and circumstances of the case".—"Investigation" is defined in S. 4 including "all the proceedings under this Code on the collection of evidence conducted by a Police-officer or by any person (other than a Magistrate) who is authorised by a Magistrate in this behalf." Every enquiry that a Police-officer in charge of a Police-station makes does not necessarily come under this section. Police-officers very frequently hear from village gossip or anonymous petitions and deem it well to make a few preliminary enquiries as to whether there is anything in what he has heard to render a formal investigation desirable. Such inquiries are not "investigations" under this section.[1]

The locking of the door of an accused person's house and the keeping of guard over the house are within the powers of the police in investigation under this section. There is nothing under this section to prevent the police of one station from acting in the jurisdiction of another Police-station.[2]

8. Object of investigation.—The object of investigation is to search for the truth and not to collect evidence to secure a conviction.[1]

9. Proviso (b).—The officer in charge of the Police-station is given full discretion whether to investigate or not, as he thinks fit, he is not bound to act on the information.[1]

10. Who can investigate under this section.—Three classes of officers can make an investigation into a crime:—

(a) The officer in charge of a Police-station.

(b) An officer below the rank of such officer as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf under this section.

(c) Officers superior to an officer in charge of a Police-station by virtue of S. 551, infra. An Inspector of the Criminal Investigation Department is an officer superior in rank to an officer in charge of a Police-station and can make an investigation under this section.[1]

11. Whether the "occurrence report" is a public document.—It has been held in the undermentioned cases[1] that the occurrence report is not an act or record of acts of a public officer and is, therefore, not a public document and that an accused is not entitled either to obtain a copy of it or to inspect it before it is filed.

12. "Or shall depute one of his subordinate officers" without warrant during investigation.—It was held under the Code of 1861 that a Police constable deputed under the provisions corresponding to this section, is not empowered to enter a house in search of property though he might do so in search of the person of the offender.[1]

13. Delay in investigation and duty of Court.—Delay in investigation causes serious prejudice to an accused person. It gives time to witnesses, even those who may not be dishonest, to bring their evidence into harmony with that of the others. It may also interfere with the preparation of the defence in that an accused may feel difficulty in recalling what he was doing at the time of the offence.[1] When there is any delay in investigation, it is the duty of a Court to enquire fully into the circumstances of the delay and consider its bearing upon the case.[2]

1. Legislative changes.—Under S. 135 of the Code of 1861, the Magistrate receiving intimation of the commission of a cognizable offence, could depute "an officer exercising any of the powers of a Magistrate" to proceed to hold a preliminary inquiry: Under the Codes of 1872 and the later Codes he could depute only a "Magistrate subordinate to him".

2. "On receiving such report".—The words "such report" mean the first information report submitted under S. 157, before investigation. They do not include the final report under S. 173, infra or the report submitted under S. 202, infra. The holding of an inquiry under this section on a final report under S. 173 after investigation will be without jurisdiction.[1]

2-A. Offence that can be investigated or inquired into.—Under this section the powers of the Magistrate are confined to inquiry and orders regarding the offence to which the report relates. The Magistrate has no power under the section to proceed against the informant.[1]

3. "If he thinks fit".—A Magistrate having before him a police report submitted to him under the provisions of S. 157 may determine, as he thinks fit, either to take no further steps, or to take cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (1) (b) or proceed under S. 203 of the Code.[1]

4. "Depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to proceed to hold a preliminary enquiry".—A Magistrate who is deputed under the provisions of this section, to hold a preliminary enquiry must do so in conformity with the directions under which he is empowered so to act. Thus where a Subordinate Magistrate is deputed to investigate a case and to record the evidence of the witnesses for the purposes of a preliminary enquiry, he has no power to question the accused and record a statement from him under S. 364.[1]

5. "Preliminary enquiry".—The expression preliminary enquiry used in this section refers to an enquiry that may be made just after the receipt

1. Legislative changes.—

Difference between 1861 and 1872 Codes—

Under S. 144 of the Code of 1861, only an officer in charge of a Police-station was empowered to require the attendance of witnesses during the course of investigation. Further the witnesses so required had to be within his station. Under the Code of 1872, an officer in charge of a Police-station or other officer making an investigation may require the attendance of witnesses and such witnesses may be within the limits of his own or adjoining station.

Difference between 1872 and 1882 Codes—

(a) The words "Any Police-officer making an investigation under this chapter" were substituted for the words "Any officer in charge of a Police station, or other officer making an investigation" which occurred in the Code of 1872.

(b) The words "who from the information given or otherwise" were substituted for the words "who from the statement of the complainant or otherwise".

S. 160, Notes 1—5.

(c) The clause beginning with "and shall answer....." and ending with "tending to criminate himself" in 1872, Code were enacted as a separate section. Vide S. 161, infra.

There is no difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 in this respect.

2. Scope and object of the section.—This section aims at securing the attendance of persons who would supply the necessary information in regard to the commission of an offence and who would be examined as witnesses in the enquiry or trial to be held in regard to the said offence.[1] The intention of the Legislature is to provide facility for the Police to obtain evidence with regard to the crime which is being investigated.[1-a] See also S. 175, infra, where a similar power is given to the Police to summon assessors to be present at the time of investigation. It is however, not necessary that the Police should have summoned a person under this section in order to examine that person. Any one who is present at the time of investigation, if acquainted with the circumstances of the case may be examined though not summoned.[2]

3. "Any Police-officer making an investigation".—The only person who can summon a witness under this section is a Police-officer making an investigation under this chapter. Thus if a Head Constable who is not making an investigation under this chapter summons a witness, the latter is not bound to obey the order and such disobedience will not be punishable under law. Nor would the evidence of such a witness (if given) form the basis of a charge under S. 191 or S. 192 of the Penal Code.[1]

4. "By order in writing".—A person is not bound to appear before the Police-officer investigating a case, without an order in writing by such officer. Disobedience of a mere verbal order is not punishable under law.[1] Similarly where a constable without an order in writing made by the investigating officer, asks a person to accompany him, he does not act in the discharge of his duty and an assault by such person on the constable is not an offence under S. 353 of the Penal Code.[2]

5. Who can be summoned under this section?—The only person that can be required to attend under this section are persons who are acquainted with the facts of the case and are likely to be witnesses at the trial to be held after investigation. In other words the section applies to witnesses and possible witnesses only.[1]

So an accused person cannot be summoned under this section to answer the complaint against him[2] and no statement can be taken from the accused preliminary to his arrest when there is evidence before the police to arrest him[2-a] inasmuch as an accused person cannot be examined as a witness (at the trial) either for or against himself.[3]

6. Purpose for which attendance required.—See S. 161, infra.

7. Service of order in writing.—The service of summons should be in accordance with Ss. 68 to 72.[1]

8. Police cannot summon production of documents.—This section does not authorise the Police-officer to summon the production of documents.[1]

9. "Before himself".—The order to attend must be to appear before the Police-officer who is making the investigation. Thus a Police-officer cannot order a person to appear before a Magistrate so that the Magistrate may record that person's statement under S. 164 of the Code.[1]

10. "Such person shall attend".—Where an order in writing by the Police-officer requiring the attendance of a person, is disobeyed, the only course is to prosecute that person for such disobedience. There is no provision of law empowering the police to compel that person to attend.[1] Even the District Magistrate cannot issue a warrant for his arrest and production before the investigating officer.[2] Nor can the Police-officer himself arrest and detain him in custody. If he does so, he may become liable for an offence of wrongful confinement.[3] But it will not amount to an offence of wrongful confinement if the person is merely taken to the Police-station and asked to wait till the Sub-Inspector saw him.[4]

The High Court of Calcutta has pointed out that where women have to be examined the examination can be done at the residence of the women and that it is not advisable to take them to the Police-station.[5]

11. If security bond can be taken from witness.—Vide Ss. 497 and 499, infra.

12. Effect of disobedience of summons.—A person who fails to attend on being served with an order under this section will be liable to be prosecuted under S. 174 of the Penal Code. But the conditions under this section should be fulfilled; namely

(a) that the Police-officer should be investigating into an offence[1] and

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 118, 119, Paras. 1 and 2 and S. 121.)

118. An officer in charge of a Police-station, or other officer making an investigation, may, by an order in writing, require the attendance before himself of any person, being within the limits of his own or any adjoining station, who, from the statement of the complainant or otherwise, appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of any case which such officer is investigating; and such person shall attend as required and shall answer all questions relating to such cases put to him by such officer:

Police-officer's power to summon witnesses.

Provided that no person shall be bound to answer any questions tending to criminate himself.

119. An officer in charge of a Police-station, or other Police-officer making an investigation, may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and may reduce into writing any statement made by the person so examined.

Oral examination of witnesses by Police.

Such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to such case, put to him by such officer, other than questions criminating himself.

* * * * * * *

121. No Police-officer shall record any statement, or any admission or confession of guilt, which may be made before him by a person accused of any offence:

Police not to record statement or confession.

Provided that nothing in this section shall preclude a Police-officer from reducing any such statement or admission or confession into writing for his own information or guidance, or from giving evidence of any dying declaration.

Proviso.

145. It shall be lawful to an officer in charge of a Police-station or other Police-officer making an enquiry, to examine orally any person who is supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. Nothing in this section shall preclude such Police-officer from reducing into writing any statement made by the person so examined:

Oral examination of witnesses by Police.

Provided that any statement so reduced into writing shall not be signed by the person making it, nor shall it be treated as part of the record or used as evidence.

Proviso.

1. Legislative changes.—The words "or any Police-officer.....of such officer" were introduced by S. 33 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Amendment Act of 1923.

2. Analogous Law.—For similar provisions under other Acts See:—

S. 13, Village Patels Act (VIII of 1867).

S. 78-A, Calcutta Police Act (IV of 1866).

S. 74, Excise Act, (Bengal Act V of 1909).

S. 41, Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878).

3. Scope and object of the section.—S. 160, ante, provides for the power to require the attendance of witnesses. This section empowers the police to examine witnesses during the course of an investigation. But as has been seen in Note 2 to S. 160 the examination is not limited to such persons only as are summoned under that section. Any one who is present may be examined if he is acquainted with the circumstances of the case.

The examination contemplated by the section is not of a judicial character and need not be in the presence of the accused or his agents.[1] The section, however, applies, only to investigations made under this chapter, i.e., relating to the commission of offences and not to merely threatened or contemplated offences.[2]

An inquest report does not come under this section.[3]

4. "Any Police-officer"—Sub-S. (1).—An Inspector of the Provincial Criminal Investigation Department is, for the purposes of this section, a Police-officer investigating within a local area extending over the whole province.[1]

5. "May examine orally."—The mere fact that a witness does not readily come forward immediately after the investigation begins, is no reason to discredit his testimony.[1] The Police-officer should not extract information by using force; such evidence is useless.[2]

6. Record of statements.—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 contained the words "may reduce into writing any statement made by the person so examined." The omission of these words in the present section shows that it is not necessary to record any statements made by witnesses under this section. But a Police-officer is not prevented from making such a record if he wishes to do so.[1]

The provisions of Ss. 164 and 364, infra, do not apply to the statement recorded under this section. It is not necessary that these statements should, if recorded, be recorded in the form of questions and answers. It is enough if it is answer to one or more questions put to the witness.[2] If the Police officer does reduce into writing any statement made under this section, he does not do so for his personal benefit but in his official capacity and so should make High Court doubted whether an inquest report under S. 174 would come under this section. As to admissibility in evidence of such statement, see S. 162.

Delay in recording the statement of a witness is calculated to cast a suspicion on it.[5]

7. Statements—Attestation of.—It is not illegal, though unnecessary for a Police-officer after recording a statement under this section to obtain the signatures of persons present at the time other than the person making the statement to authenticate his record of such statement as witnesses.[1] But under the next section (S. 162) obtaining the signature of the person making the statement is expressly forbidden.

8. Any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.—It has been seen in Note 5 to S. 160, ante that the expression "any person" in that section applies only to witnesses or possible witness and not to accused persons. This section also uses the words "any person" and it has been held, especially in view of the marginal note, that this section also applies only to witnesses and not to accused persons.[1] In Syams Maha Patro v. Emperor, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 391 F.B. in which the question referred to the Full Bench was whether the words "statement made by any person" under S. 162, included statements made by persons accused of the offence under investigation, two of the judges constituting the Full Bench expressed the opinion that the words "any person" used in S. 161 were quite general and would include accused persons also, and that the marginal note could not be imported into the interpretation of the section so as to restrict its wide meaning. Waller, J., who was one of the referring judges, however, disagreed with that view.

It is only a person believed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case that may be examined under this section. A Police-officer is not authorised to summon a person and ask him his opinion as a "juryman"; the person so concerned is not bound to answer the question.[2] A person can be examined under this section only in respect of question relating to the case, i.e., with regard to the offence investigated. A person cannot be summoned, for instance, and asked to examine the hands of any other person to see if there were marks showing that the hands were tied with rope.[3] Similarly a person who stood as surety for an accused person whose appeal was pending in the High Court cannot be examined as to the whereabouts of the accused who absconded after the dismissal of the High Court Appeal.[4]

9. "Shall be bound to answer"—Sub-S. (2).—In Empress v. Kassim Khan, I.L.R. 7 Cal. 121 F. B. it was held that the words "shall be bound to answer all questions" did not constitute an express provision of law to state the truth. Garth, C. J., observed as follows:—

"Ss. 118 and 119" (corresponding to Ss. 160 and 161 of this Code) "are, in our opinion, merely intended to oblige persons to give such information as they can to the police in answer to questions which may be put to them and they impose no legal obligation on those persons to speak the truth unless we import the word "truly" in each section after the word "question" which we clearly have no right to do."

In view of this decision, the word "truly" was introduced in the Code of 1882 after the word "answer" and so it was held under that Code, that a person who was examined by a Police-officer was bound to state the truth[1] except in the case of incriminating questions.[2] The said word has again been omitted in the present section with the result that the law as laid down in 7 Cal. 121 is still good law.[3]

A person making a false statement in answer to questions under this section cannot therefore be convicted for an offence under S. 193 of the Penal Code.[4] Nor can he be convicted for an offence under S. 203 of that Code inasmuch as he does not volunteer information, but only answers questions.[5] Nor Statements to police not to be signed or admitted in evidence.

162.* (1) No statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall, if taken down in writing, be signed by the person making it, nor shall such writing be used as evidence: Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof: and such statement may be used to impeach the credit of such witness in manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Statements to police not to be signed; use of such statements in evidence.

162. (1) No statement made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall, if reduced into writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made:

Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly

Provided, further, that if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefor) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to any statement falling within the provisions of Section 32, clause (1), of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

Proviso.

No statement so reduced into writing shall be signed by the person making it, nor shall it be treated as part of the record or used as evidence.

Police not to record statement or confession.

121. No Police-officer shall record any statement, or any admission or confession of guilt, which may be made before him by a person accused of any offence:

Provided that nothing in this section shall preclude a Police-officer from reducing any such statement or admission or confession into writing for his own information or guidance, or from giving evidence of any dying declaration.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Code of 1861 and 1872—

Except in form, there is practically no difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

Changes introduced in 1882—

(i) The words "other than a dying declaration" "were added thereby exempting dying declarations from the purview of the section.

(ii) The words "made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter" were added.

(iii) The words "nor shall it be used as part of the record or as used as evidence" were substituted by the words "or be used as evidence against the accused."

(iv) The clause "nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act" was newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898—

(i) The words "other than a dying declaration" were omitted but sub-Cl. (2) was added.

(ii) The words "or be used as evidence against the accused" were substituted by the words "nor shall such writing be used as evidence".[1] See Notes 11 and 12.

Section 162—Note 1. Jagat Chandra Mali.]

() [See (1894) 22 Cal. 50 (72), Empress v.

S. 162, Notes 1—2.

(iii) A proviso was newly added in 1898 by which the time, when the copies could be applied for, the mode and purpose for which such statements could be used, were laid down.

(iv) The proviso with regard to S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act was omitted.

Amendments in 1923—

(i) The words "nor shall such writing be used as evidence" were substituted by the words "nor shall any such statement . . . when such statement was made." The effect of the change was to set at rest the controversy whether oral evidence of the statement could be let in though the writing itself could not be used as evidence. See Note 11.

(ii) The old proviso was repealed and two new provisos were added. By this change the discretion of the Court to grant the copies to the accused was curtailed, such grant being subject only to the conditions mentioned in proviso 2; and stress has been laid on proper proof of the statement. Vide Notes 14 and 15. The amended section has cleared up a number of misapprehensions which seem to have prevailed as to the scope of the section.[2]

2. Scope and object of the section.—Under the Evidence Act the previous statement of a witness can be used.

(1) Under S. 145, to contradict the witness.
(2) Under S. 155, to impeach his credit and
(3) Under S. 157, to corroborate his testimony.

This section provides that no statement made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall be used for any purpose except

(1) by the accused.
(2) for the purpose of contradicting the witness as provided by S. 145 of the Evidence Act.[1]

The effect of this section is thus to limit considerably the provisions of the Evidence Act in regard to the matters covered by it.[2] The reason for such restriction is that such statements are recorded by police-officers in the most haphazard manner. Officers conducting the investigation not unnaturally record what seems in their opinion material to the case at that stage and omit many matters equally material and, it may be, of supreme importance as the case develops. Besides that in most cases they are not experts of what is and what is not evidence. The statements are often recorded hurriedly in the midst of a crowd and confusion subject to frequent interruptions and suggestions from by-standers. Over and above all they cannot in any sense be termed depositions, for they are not prepared in the way of depositions, they are not read over to nor are they signed by deponents. There is no guarantee that they do not contain much more or much less than what the witness has said.[3]

The section protects persons from being pinned down to statements recorded by the police.[4]

3. "Statement," meaning of.—The section applies only to a statement and if what is recorded does not amount to a statement of a witness, the record is privileged and the accused is not entitled to a copy thereof.[1-a] The word "statement" in this section includes both oral and written statements as is made clear by the use of the words "if reduced into writing".[1] It will also include signs and gestures.[2] In the undermentioned cases[3] it was held that a list of stolen properties supplied to the police during investigation is a "statement" within the meaning of the section.

The word "statement" will not, however include the record of a search made by the police,[4] or signatures taken on blank paper for the purpose of comparison.[5]

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether this section applies to evidence of identification of a person in the course of a police investigation. The High Courts of Allahabad[6] and Calcutta[7] have held that identification of a person amounts to a statement within this section and that therefore the fact of such identification is not admissible in evidence in the usual course. But the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has taken a different view[8] and the Patna High Court has held that such evidence is admissible under S. 157 of the Evidence Act.[9] It is submitted that the view of the Patna High Court and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court is not correct.

4. Statements made by an accused to a police-officer.—Where a statement to a police-officer is a confession by an accused person, it is, independent of this section, inadmissible in evidence against the accused under S. 25 of the Evidence Act,[1] except to the extent specified in S. 27 of that Act. Where a statement to a police-officer is by an accused person, but does not amount to a confession, there is a conflict of opinion whether it is inadmissible in evidence under the provisions of this section. S. 162, Note 4.

Allahabad,[2] Calcutta,[3] Lahore,[4] Patna[5] and Rangoon[6] and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur[7] and Sind,[8] this section does not apply to statements made by persons accused of an offence under investigation, but applies only to witnesses. The reasoning by which this result is arrived at is twofold:—Firstly that Ss. 160 and 161 apply only to witnesses and not to accused persons, that this section should be read along with Ss. 160 and 161 and that when so read this also applies only to witnesses; secondly that if this section be construed as applying to accused persons, S. 27 of the Evidence Act by which a statement by an accused to the police is under certain circumstances admissible, would be repealed and that this could not have been intended by the Legislature.

The High Court of Bombay[9] and the High Court of Madras[10] have on the other hand held that this section applies to all persons examined by the police, witnesses, as well as persons accused of the offence under investigation. In arriving at this opinion the Full Bench adopted the following reasoning:—

(1) It cannot be said that S. 161, does not apply to accused persons and S. 162 need not therefore by a reference to S. 161, be restricted to witnesses.

(2) The reasoning that the literal interpretation of S. 162 contradicts S. 27 of the Evidence Act and practically repeals it, is not correct inasmuch as a general provision does not derogate from a special provision. (As to the correctness of this view, see Note 5, infra.)

(3) The word "any" is wide and general, and as such the expression "any person" should include not only a witness but also persons suspected or accused of an offence.

5. Effect of this section on S. 27 of the Evidence Act.—As has been seen already a confession made to a police-officer is inadmissible in evidence under S. 25 of the Evidence Act against the person making it. A confession made to a third party is equally inadmissible under S. 26 of the Evidence Act if it is made while the person making it is in the custody of a police-officer, unless it is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate. S. 27 of the Evidence Act provides an exception to these two sections and enacts that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police-officer, so much of such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. This contradicts prima facie the provisions of this section under which no statement made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation shall be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made. S. 162, Note 5.

The question has therefore arisen as to which provision is to prevail where a statement falls within both the sections. According to the High Court of Madras S. 162 is a general provision while S. 27 of the Evidence Act is a special one, that under general principles of law general provisions do not derogate from special provisions and that consequently S. 27 of the Evidence Act is not affected by this section.[1] The High Court of Allahabad has arrived at the same result from two alternative standpoints. Firstly, that S. 162 does not apply to accused persons at all, that consequently there is no contradiction between the two sections and that S. 27 of the Evidence Act is therefore not affected by S. 162 of the Code; secondly, that even if this section applies to accused person, S. 1, sub-S. (2) of the Code provides that, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary nothing contained in the Code shall affect any special law, in force, that the Evidence Act is a special law and that consequently this section cannot in any way affect S. 27 of the Evidence Act.[2] All the other High Courts are agreed that S. 162 does not apply to accused persons at all and consequently S. 27 of the Evidence Act which applies to accused persons is not affected by this section.[3]

None of the said decisions have, however, adverted to the last paragraph of S. 2 of the Evidence Act which provides as follows:—"Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any provision of any Statute, Act, or Regulation in force in any part of British India and not hereby expressly repealed." This is a "specific provision to the contrary" within the meaning of S. 1, sub-S. (2) of this Code and, in the case of a conflict between the Evidence Act and the Code, the Code will clearly prevail. It is therefore submitted that if this section be construed as applying to accused persons it will clearly have the effect of superseding S. 27 of the Evidence Act. This difficulty is avoided by construing this section as not applying to accused persons, in which case, it will not affect S. 27 of the Evidence Act.[4]

6. Statements of approvers to the Police.—A statement by an approver to a Police-officer in the course of an investigation stands on the same footing as a statement made by any other person and is inadmissible in evidence except as provided by S. 27 of the Evidence Act or under the proviso to this section.[1] Thus, the discrepancies between the statements of a witness and the approver cannot be explained by referring to the evidence of the approver made before the Police during investigation.[2]

7. "In the course of an investigation under this chapter."—It is only a statement made during the course of an investigation that is prohibited from being used in evidence. A statement made to a Police-officer before the investigation began or after the investigation has ended[1] does not fall within this section. Thus the first information as to the commission of an offence is a statement made before the investigation begins and is admissible in evidence.[2] But a statement made to a Police-officer while acting under S. 174,

infra, is one in the course of investigation and is inadmissible under this section.[3]

The investigation must be one under this chapter. Where the investigation is under the Bombay City Police Act[4] or the Calcutta City Police Act[5] (to which, by virtue of S. 1, sub-S. (2), this Code does not apply) this section will not apply. Similarly an investigation under Chap. VIII (Security proceedings) is not one under this chapter and a statement made during such investigation is not within this section.[6] So also, a statement made by a person to an Excise Officer in the course of an investigation under the Opium Act is not within the section.[6-a] But it has been held that the section applies to an investigation by an Excise Officer under the Bengal Excise Act of 1909.[6-b]

A departmental enquiry, is not an investigation under this chapter and statements to a Police-officer during such enquiry are not inadmissible in evidence[7] under this section.

8. "If reduced into writing".—A Police-officer to whom a statement is made by any person in the course of investigation is not bound to reduce such statement into writing.[1] But if he does so reduce it he should record it correctly; otherwise he may become liable to be punished under Ss. 167 and 218 of the Penal Code.[2] The paper on which such statements are taken should be attached to the Police diary which should contain a narrative of events.[3] Police-officers who are charged with the duty of investigating crimes should not be in a position to take statements of witnesses, extract as much as they think is relevant or important for entry in their diaries and then destroy the original statement.[4]

It is not necessary that the Police-officer should have taken down the statement in direct form, or the very words used by the witnesses.[5] Even where only the gist or memorandum of what the witness said is taken down, it is a "statement" within the meaning of this section.[6] But it will not include a mere summary of it in the charge sheet.[7] S. 162, Notes 8—10.

Where the statements of two or more witnesses are taken down by the Police-officer jointly the accused is not entitled to copies of the "statements".[8] In 1932 Cal. 375, the matter was explained thus:—"If the joint statement means more than one statement is contained in one document or that a number of statements are recorded seriatim, then the defence may be allowed to see and use the statements.....If on the other hand it means that the stories told by a number of witnesses have been boiled down into a statement of his (Police-officer's own, then the defence should not be allowed to use such a statement".[9] Suppose the Police-officer examines a witness S and takes down his statement: Then he examines A who repeats the same story. The Police-officer states "A corroborates S". In such circumstances it would appear that the accused is entitled to the statements of S and A and can use them as contemplated by the section.[10] A map prepared by the Police-officer containing statements of witnesses is within the section.[11]

9. "Statement not to be signed".—The Police-officer to whom the statement is made in the course of investigation should not require the witness to sign such statement.[1] "The policy underlying the rule contained in this section seems to be that witnesses at the trial should be free to make statements in favour of the accused which they should wish to make, unhampered by anything which they might have been made to say to the police. The result of the witness's signature having been obtained on their statements reduced into writing would be to tie them down to the statements so recorded, at any rate to give them the impression that they were not free to make a different statement".[2]

The mere fact that a statement made during the investigation is signed by the person making it, does not thereby render it an information under S. 154, supra.[3]

Where a witness who had signed a statement to the Police denied his signature at the trial and he was sought to be prosecuted under S. 193 of the Penal Code, it was held that the procedure contravened the policy of the Ss. 161 and 162 of the Code; the order sanctioning prosecution was quashed.[4]

10. Proviso—Limited use of previous statements.—It has been seen in Note 5, supra, that where the provisions of this section are inconsistent with those of the Evidence Act the former will prevail over the latter. A previous statement falling within this section and inadmissible under it, cannot therefore be used by reference to the provisions of the Evidence Act.

The proviso to this section enacts that a previous statement falling within this section can be used for a limited purpose under the circumstances specified therein. In order that the proviso might apply it is essential that

(1) a witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been reduced into writing as referred to in the section;

(2) the person who uses it is the accused and

(3) the statement is used for the purpose of condradicting such witness under S. 145 of the Evidence Act.

Witness called for the prosecution.—Where a witness is called for the defence his previous statement cannot be used either by the prosecution or by the defence for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating him under S. 157 of the Evidence Act.[1] Similarly where a witness is called by the Court and not by the prosecution, a previous statement made by him to the Police cannot be used either by the prosecution or by the accused for any purpose.[2] A contrary view was taken in the undermentioned case.[3] The case was, however, one under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 and cannot be considered to be good law under the present section. Where a person is neither called for the prosecution nor for the defence, his statement to the police cannot of course be made use of in any manner.[3-a] It was, however, held in the case noted below[3-b] that where a statement made by a deceased person was admitted under S. 32, Cl. (3) of the Evidence Act, it could be contradicted under S. 158 of that Act by a statement made by him to the Police. It is submitted that this decision is not correct.[3-c]

Only the accused can use such statements.—It is only the accused that can claim to use the previous statements of a prosecution witness for the purpose specified in the proviso.[3-d] The prosecution cannot use it against the accused[4] either by way of corroborating the witness[4-a] or by way of contradicting him if he has been treated as a hostile witness.[5] Nor can the Court exercise its powers under S. 165 of the Evidence Act and use the statements as evidence.[6] It cannot compare the evidence given by the prosecution witnesses with previous statements made by them without their being brought on the record as provided by this section and as a result of such comparison, convict the accused.[7] Nor can it, after comparison of the statements of the witnesses in the Police-diary, use the statements to the prejudice of the accused by saying that "the defence is improving its story at every stage".[8] Nor can it refer to the failure of the defence to use the previous statements under this section and direct the jury to draw therefrom an adverse inference against the accused.[9] (See also Note 15, infra.)

Statement can only be used for contradiction.—A previous statement by a prosecution witness falling under this section, can be used by the accused only for the purpose of contradicting such witness under S. 145 of the Evidence Act[9-a] and not for any other purpose such as corroborating a prosecution witness[10] or contradicting a defence witness.[11] Nor can it be used as substantive evidence in favour of or against the accused.[12]

This section does not, however, prevent a Police-officer from explaining his conduct even though it may inferentially have reference to the statements made by witnesses.[13] Thus where a Police-officer states in the witness box that no such case as is put forward by the defence before the Court was stated before him at the investigation, there is no use made of any previous statement of any witness to the Police-officer and the evidence is not inadmissible.[14]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the statement before the Police can be used to show that the witness omitted to state a particular fact. It was held by the High Court of Patna in the undermentioned case[15] that the statement cannot be used at large for the purpose of showing that the statements did not corroborate or assist the story as put forward in the first information. In a subsequent case of the same High Court[16] it was held that if the contradiction consists in the fact that a statement made at the trial was not made in any part of the statement to the Police, such a contradiction can be proved. Recently it was held by Rowland, J., of the same High Court[17] that the omission of some detail in the note of a statement to a Police-officer is not always a sure indication that such detail was absent from the statement and that the Court should never use such an absence as a contradiction without taking the evidence to prove that no such thing was stated. According to the High Court of Madras "omission" and "contradiction" can never be identical and a statement to a Police-officer cannot be used during an enquiry or trial in order to show that a witness is making statements in the witness box which he did not make to the Police.[18] According to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur it is an error to decline to allow the defence to draw the attention of the prosecution witnesses to the omissions and seek their explanations.[19] The High Court of Lahore has held that all omissions are not necessarily contradictions but that it must be left to the Court in each particular case to decide whether the omission is a contradiction or not. If it amounts to a contradiction, the Court should allow cross examination on that point.[20] According to the High Court of Calcutta the deposition of a witness to the effect that he did not make any statement to the police is not a statement within S. 162 of the Code.[21] It is submitted that the view of the High Court of Madras is correct. It was held in the undermentioned case[22] that a Police-officer could be questioned by the prosecution whether a witness made a particular statement to him. It is submitted that this is not correct.

The prosecution is not bound to produce in Court every person examined by the police. But the police ought not to avoid calling any witness merely because he is likely to give evidence in favour of the accused.[23]

While all the High Courts agreed in holding that the writing itself could not be used as evidence,[1] there was a conflict of opinion as to whether oral evidence of the statement was admissible.[2] The amendment of the section by the insertion of the words "nor shall any such statement or any record thereof . . . be used for any purpose" has now set the conflict at rest and no oral evidence of the statement is now admissible.[3]

S. 162, Note 12.

12. "At any inquiry or trial of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made".—A is alleged to have murdered X. In the course of the investigation by the police into the case of murder, B gives a statement to the Police-officer. Can B's statement be used in a subsequent inquiry or trial unconnected with the murder case? Before the amendment of 1923 there was a conflict of opinion on the point; some decisions holding that it could not be done[1] and some that it could be done.[2] Under the present section it is clear that statements made during the course of investigation can be used in a subsequent case which was not under investigation when the witness made the statement.[3]

Illustrations.

1. In the course of an investigation by the police into a case of dacoity P, stated that A & B had taken part in the dacoity. Three days after the statement was given, P was murdered. A and B were charged of the murder of P. Held, that the statement of P can be used in the murder case to show enmity.[4]

2. A makes a statement to the police during the investigation into an offence. The statement turns out to be false. It can be used as against A when he is prosecuted for offences under Ss. 182, 192, 193 or 211 of the Penal Code.[5]

3. A complaint is made to the police who after investigation under Ch. XIV reject the complaint as false. The complainant then presses the complaint before the Court. In the trial that takes place on such complaint statement of witnesses to the police during investigation can be used only in accordance with S. 162 of the Code.[6] The reason is that the accused is tried for the same offence as that into which the police investigated and in the course of which investigation the statements were made.

The statements made during investigation can be used in proceedings under Ss. 517 and 523 of the Code[7] and also in a subsequent civil suit.[8] See also Note 14. S. 162, Notes 12—13.

As the section expressly applies both to enquiries and trials, commitment proceedings are within the ambit of the section.[9]

13. Application for copies when to be made.—The accused is not as a matter of course and without question entitled to get copies of statements made to the police during the course of investigation.[1] It is only when a witness is called by the prosecution and under the circumstances mentioned in the proviso that the accused may be given such copies.[1-a] The witness, a copy of whose statement is required should, it has been held, be in the witness box when the application for copies is made.[2] An application for copies cannot be granted where it is made before the witness is in the witness box[3] or after his examination is over. Thus where all the prosecution witnesses have been examined in the committing Court, the accused cannot apply to the committing Magistrate for copies.[3-a] He should only apply to the Sessions Judge at the time of trial.[4] Similarly in a warrant case, where the copies were not applied for during the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses before charge was framed but were applied after charge and before the prosecution witnesses were called for re-cross-examination it was held that copies could not be granted till the witnesses were again in the box for cross-examination.[5] Again where a witness was tendered by the prosecution but was discharged without being examined, and thereafter application for a copy of his statement to the police was made, it was held that it should be refused.[6]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the accused is entitled to get copies as soon as the prosecution witness enters the witness box, or only after his chief examination is over. It was held in the undermentioned cases[7] that the opportune moment to ask for copies was when the chief examination of the witness was over and the defence was about to begin its cross-examination.

In Ramgulam Teli v. Emperor[8] it was held that the right to apply for copies accrues the moment the witnesses appear before the Court to be examined. The same view has been held in the undermentioned case also.[9] According to the High Court of Lahore[10] though the accused person is entitled to a copy of the statement until the witness is sought to be cross-examined, there is no harm in granting such copies at an earlier stage. It was held in the cases noted below[11] that the accused was not entitled to copies until, not only the cross-examination had begun but until the cross-examination had laid the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court is contradicted by such statement. This view has, however, been dissented from in later cases.[12]

The application for copies need not be in writing—an oral application is sufficient.[13]

14. Duty of Court to grant copies.—Under the proviso to the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 it was provided that "the Court shall on the request of the accused, refer to such writing, and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof". The grant of copies was therefore a matter of judicial discretion.[1] This discretion has been taken away by the present section and the Court is bound to grant copies,[2] unless it is of opinion.

(1) that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the inquiry or trial or

(2) that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, and is inexpedient in the public interests.[3]

Thus a Court cannot refuse to grant copies on the ground that the statements had not been recorded in full and that all that was recorded was a memorandum of the same[4] or that there was no contradiction between what the witness says in his evidence and his previous statement[5] or that the statements were of "no real value as evidence".[6] The words "the Court shall refer to such writing" are used, not for the purpose of restricting the right of the accused to obtain a copy, but for the purpose of enabling the Court to see whether the statement or any part thereof is relevant to the inquiry or whether its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests.[7] The reference should be made by the Court as soon as the request is made on behalf of the accused. The Court is not at liberty to postpone referring to the statement till after the witness's evidence is concluded.[8] Whenever necessary, the cross-examination of the witness must be adjourned until the necessary copy has been given.[8-a] To obviate delay in the trial due to such adjournment copies of police statements may be had in readiness at the commencement of the trial.[8-b] It would also be sufficient compliance with the section to allow the defence pleader to see the statement of the witness to the police and to cross-examine thereon while the copy is being prepared.[8-c]

Where a request is made for a copy of the previous statement of a witness, a copy of all the statements made by such witness during the investigation should be furnished. Thus where the witness gave statements on 2 days, it is not correct to grant a copy of the statement given on the first day only.[9] So also, the accused is entitled to a copy of the whole statement made by a witness excepting the portion that may be excluded under the second proviso to the section.[9-a]

Where in granting copies of statements material portions have been omitted by oversight on the part of the typist, and the omission is discovered only in the appellate Court, the appellate Court should furnish the accused with a correct copy and also give the accused an opportunity to recall the witness and cross-examine them.[10]

But the duty to grant copies under this section arises only if the case being inquired into or tried by the Court at the time is the same as the one which was under investigation when the statement was made. An accused is not entitled to copies of statements recorded in the course of investigation of other cases.[11] (See Note 12, supra.)

S. 162, Notes 15—16.

15. "On the request of the accused".—A Court is not justified in admitting the previous statements of witnesses to the police, unless the accused or his advocate requests the Court to refer to them and to grant copies. The Court may, however, suggest to the accused that he should ask for a reference to the police papers.[1]

An application is not necessary for making the request. An oral request is enough.[2]

It has been held that the effect of this section is that a Court is not entitled to look into the police papers even privately, unless requested to do so by the accused.[3] But where objection is raised in appeal on the ground that copies of statements were not granted under this section and the appellate Court orders such copies to be furnished to the appellant, it is not open to the latter if there are no contradictions between the witness's deposition in the Court and his previous statement, to contend that the Appellate Court should not look at the statements unless requested to do so by him.[4]

16. Contradicting witness under the section—Procedure.—Under S. 145 of the Evidence Act

(1) A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him and reduced into writing, without such writing being proved.

(2) But if it is intended to contradict him by such writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him.

In view of the first paragraph of S. 162 the first portion of S. 145 of the Evidence Act can have no application. Thus the prosecution witness cannot be merely asked whether he made a previous statement to the contrary to the investigating Police-officer and the matter left there. The answer of the witness cannot be used as evidence. The only way in which the previous statement can be used is by contradicting the witness by such writing and this can be done only by drawing his attention to such recorded statements and then by only proving such record.[1] A contrary view has been taken in the undermentioned case namely that a witness can be asked about his previous statements to the Police and that if he admits having made the statement, it can be used in evidence without the record being proved.[2] It is submitted that this is not correct. S. 162, Note 16.

The record may be proved by asking the Police-officer when he gets into the witness box whether the witness made such statements to him and whether the record was made by him[3], or if the officer is not available, by showing that the statement was written in the handwriting of the particular officer.[4]

If necessary, in order to avoid delay, cross-examination may be allowed subject to subsequent proof of the statement.[4-a]

It is not necessary that the record should be proved before the witness's attention is drawn to it in cross-examination. The words in S. 145 of the Evidence Act that "his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called, etc.," make it clear that the proof of the writing can be given after it is put to the witness. The view expressed in the undermentioned cases[5] that the proof must be given before it is put to the witness is, it is submitted not correct. Nor is it necessary to resort to the second paragraph of S. 136 of the Evidence Act as was suggested in the case noted below,[6] to get over the supposed necessity for proving the record before it is put to the witness.

It is the duty of the defence to prove the statements of which they make use in cross-examination and where they have not done so, it is not open to them thereafter, to object that such statements have been brought on the record without proof.[6-a]

If the procedure prescribed by S. 145 of the Evidence Act is not adopted and the witness's attention drawn to the written record, it cannot be used in evidence[7] and the Police-officer cannot be asked about it.[8] The cross-examination of the witness must be confined to the contradiction between his two statements.[8-a] Only those portions of the statements, as have been used to contradict the witness, will form part of the judicial record. The other parts of the statement cannot be relied upon by either side in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and should not be relied upon by the Judge.[9] But subject to the power of the Judge or Magistrate to disallow any question which in his opinion does not fall within the purview of S. 145 of the Evidence Act, it is for the accused or his pleader to decide in what manner and to what extent he will use the statement for the purpose of cross-examination with reference to the alleged contradiction.[9-a]

As to the necessity of putting the writing to the witness before it can be used as evidence see the undermentioned cases.[10] In the undermentioned case[11] the tendency of Police-officers to try to remove all discrepancies in the evidence of witnesses as originally recorded in police statements was condemned.

17. Re-examination.—As has been seen already the prosecution cannot use the statement to the police either for contradicting the defence witness, or for corroborating or contradicting its own witnesses. Where, however, the accused has used one part of the statement given by a prosecution witness to the police, for the purpose of contradicting that witness, any other part of such statement may, under this proviso, be used by the prosecution for the purpose of explaining any matter referred to in his cross-examination. This provision was made by the Amending Act of 1923. But under the guise of re-examination the statement before the police cannot be used to corroborate a prosecution witness.[1] As to the duty of the public prosecutor to give the witness an opportunity to explain the contradictory statement see the undermentioned case.[2]

18. "Whether in a police Diary or otherwise".—Under this section as it stood before the amendment of 1923 there was a conflict of opinion as to whether, where the statement of witnesses were entered in the police diary the privilege under S. 172 attached to them and whether the accused could not use them as specified in this section.[1] The conflict has now been set as rest by the addition of the words "whether in a police diary or otherwise" and it is now clear that the statements of witnesses during investigation, even though taken down in the special diary, can be used by the accused for the purposes specified in the proviso.[2] The object of the proviso as amended is that a Police-officer should no longer claim privilege in respect of statements on the ground that it is recorded under S. 172.[3]

19. Effect of admitting in evidence statements inadmissible under this section.—It is the duty of the trial Court to refuse to admit evidence which is not admissible according to law. Even the consent of parties will not transform such inadmissible evidence into admissible ones.[1] But the mere fact that inadmissible evidence has been received will not render the trial void ab-initio. It is only an error curable under S. 537, infra. Thus if the reception of inadmissible evidence has not caused any prejudice to the accused and occasioned failure of justice, it will not render the trial void. It is a question of fact in every case whether there has been a failure of justice consequent upon such reception of evidence.[2] S. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down "the improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be of itself a ground for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. . . ." If the Court of appeal or revision holds that inadmissible evidence has been received, it should wholly ignore such evidence and see if there is other evidence on record to justify the decision of the lower Court.[3] The Privy Council will refuse to interfere on the mere ground of wrong reception of evidence.[4]

20. Effect of refusal to grant copies to accused under this section.—Where a Court illegally refuses to give copies to the accused and if on a reference to the statements it appears that the accused has been prejudiced the conviction will be quashed and a new trial ordered.[1] Each case must however be decided on its own facts and the extent of the prejudice to the accused in each case must determine whether the trial should be held altogether vitiated or whether the defect can be remedied.[2] Where the lower Court wrongly refuses to furnish a copy of the prior statement of a witness, the proper course in appeal is that the counsel should be furnished with a copy of the statement and any contradictions between that statement and those made in Court by the witness should be taken as left unexplained by him.[3] The case may also be remanded to the lower Court in a proper case.[4] Where a committing Magistrate refuses copies of statements, the committal need not be quashed because the accused has an opportunity to use the statement in the Sessions Court.[5]

20-A. Failure to observe provisions of section—Effect.—A failure to observe the provisions of this section is only an error curable under the provisions of S. 537.[1]

21. 'Dying declarations'.—Sub-Cl. (2) of this section exempts from its operation "dying declaration" falling within S. 32, Cl. (1) of the Evidence Act. A dying declaration made to a Police-officer during the course of investigation is not therefore subject to the limitations mentioned in the main clause of the section.[1] The admission of dying declarations as evidence rests on the doctrine of necessity; the injured person who is dead, is generally the principal witness and so is likely to know more or as much, about the circumstances of his death than or as any other person.[2] Further the declarant is in a condition in which according to the experience of mankind it is not less likely that what he says is true than if it had been said before a Magistrate under the sanction of an oath in the presence of the prisoner.[3] When a man gasps out his story soon after the occurrence it may be said that there was no time for him to fabricate or for his friends to suggest falsehood.[4] But simply on that ground it gets no greater sanctity than any other piece of evidence. As matter of fact it should be scrutinised with great care. It is not safe to base a conviction merely on the dying declaration.[5]

Before the enactment of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, it was held that the declarant should, while making the declaration, be under the belief that he is dying. So evidence had to be let in to prove his state of mind and about his belief.[6] Under the Evidence Act dying declarations are now relevant whether the person who made them was or was not at the time when they were made, under the expectation of death.[7] In England the law is still as it was in India before the enactment of the Indian Evidence Act, namely that the injured person must be aware that he is dying. There is another distinction between the Indian and English Law. In England the rule applies only to criminal cases and to cases of homicide. This distinction also has been done away with by the Indian Evidence Act.[8]

The dying declaration is admissible only when the declarant's cause of death is in issue. Thus a statement of the deceased as to accused stabbing another person is inadmissible.[9]

S 162, Note 21.

When dying declarations are taken, the questions and answers should be taken and not merely in the narrative form.[10]

The dying declaration does not cease to be one merely because the declarant lingers for a few days and then only dies.[11]

But where a person who made the dying declaration chances to live his statement cannot be admitted in evidence as dying declaration under S. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act though it may be relied on under S. 157 of the said Act to corroborate the testimony of the complainant when examined in the case.[12] He can also be contradicted with that dying declaration under S. 155 of the Indian Evidence Act.

See also the following cases[13] which show that dying declarations should be properly proved before they can be acted upon.

1. Legislative Changes.—The corresponding section of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 applied to accused persons and to persons arrested. The words "in authority" were also not found after the words "or person".

This section and the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 do not differ in any material particular.

But no Police-officer or other person shall prevent, by any caution or otherwise, any person from making in the course of any investigation under this chapter any statement which he may be disposed to make of his own free-will.

No inducement to be offered to confess.

120. No Police-officer or other person shall offer any inducement to an accused person by threat or promise or otherwise to make any disclosure or confession, whether such person is under arrest or not.

But no Police-officer or other person shall prevent the person arrested, by any caution or otherwise from making any disclosure which he may be disposed to make of his own free-will.

Inducements to disclosure or confession.

184. No Police-officer or other person shall offer to the person arrested any inducement, by threat or promise or otherwise, to make any disclosure.

But no Police-officer or other person shall prevent the person arrested, by any caution or otherwise, from making any disclosure which he may be disposed to make of his own free-will.

No threat, promise or caution, as to disclosure by party arrested.

98. No Police-officer or other person shall offer to the person arrested any inducement, by threat or promise or otherwise, to make any disclosure. But no Police-officer or other person shall prevent the person arrested, by any caution or otherwise, from making any disclosure which he may be disposed to make of his own free-will.

No inducement to be offered to accused person to confess.

S. 163, Notes 2—3.

2. Scope of the section.—This section enacts that no Police-officer or other person in authority—

(1) shall induce any person to make any disclosure, or

(2) shall prevent him by caution or otherwise from making any statement which he may be disposed to make of his own free-will.

It applies only where an investigation is being made under this chapter. S. 343, infra, which occurs in the chapter dealing with general provisions as to enquiries and trials, enacts that no influence by means of any promise or threat or otherwise shall be used to an accused person to induce him to disclose or to withhold any matter within his knowledge.

Where a confession is obtained from an accused person by the use of any inducement, threat or promise, S. 24 of the Evidence Act enacts that such confession is inadmissible in evidence.

Any person causing hurt or wrongfully confining any person for the purpose of extorting any confession or information which may lead to the detection of an offence or misconduct may be guilty of an offence under Ss. 330, 331 or 328 of the Penal Code.[1]

3. Police-officer.—This expression "Police-officer" is also found in Ss. 25 to 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. In construing the expression under those sections of that Act it has been held that the expression "Police-officer" in Ss. 148, 149 and 150 of the Code of 1861 enacted the provisions now contained in Ss. 25, 26 and 27 of the Evidence Act. The words "Police-officer" referred to in the latter sections have been interpreted by judicial decisions and it has been held that they should be read not in any restricted sense but according to their more comprehensive and popular meaning.[1] Thus it has been held that the expression includes Police-officers in a foreign state as well as those in British India.[2] It has also been held that it is not restricted to the investigating Police-officer[3] or to the officers only of a regular police force[4] and that it includes an officer like the Deputy Commissioner of Police in Calcutta since in common parlance and amongst generality of people he is known as a Police-officer.[5]

The following persons have been held to be Police-officers within the meaning of Ss. 25 to 27 of the Evidence Act:—

(5) Excise Inspector in Bengal,[21] Punjab,[22] Burma,[23] Patna,[24] Madras[25] and Sindh.[25-a] In Bombay a different view has been taken.[25-b]

(6) A Panchayat.[25-c]

It is a question whether these decisions, though under the Evidence Act are not relevant in interpreting the words "Police-officer" used in this section.

4. Person in authority.—The words "person in authority" occur in S. 24 of the Evidence Act also. The principle and object of that section and of this section being the same, the decisions bearing upon the interpretation of the words "person in authority" as used in S. 24 of the Evidence Act may be usefully referred to in interpreting this section also.

In deciding whether a certain person is a person in authority the test is to see whether he has authority to interfere with the matter. Any concern or interest in it would be sufficient to give such authority.[1] Generally speaking a "person in authority" is one who is engaged in the apprehension, detention or the prosecution of the accused or one who is empowered to examine him.[2] The following persons have been held to be "persons in authority":—

(1) A travelling auditor of a railway company, in relation to a railway clerk who had committed defalcations.[3]

(2) The prosecutor.[4]

(3) Wife of the prosecutor concerned in the management of their business.[5]

(4) A Magistrate.[6]

(5) A Police patel in Bombay.[7]

S. 163, Notes 4—5.

It is not enough that the accused or the persons making the statement thought the party a person in authority but such person must be one in actual authority.[25]

5. Inducement, etc.—The inducement, threat or promise referred to in this section is of the nature and description as the inducement, etc., referred to in S. 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. Whether any threat or inducement was offered in any particular case is a question of fact and has to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case.[1] If it appears to the Court that the statement was caused by any inducement on threat or promise, it must declare such statement irrelevant under S. 24 of the Evidence Act. As to cases bearing on the word "appears" in that section, see the undermentioned cases.[2] The onus of proving the existence of inducement, threat or promise is on the accused and he must prove his allegations[3] and in the absence of evidence illegal pressure will not be presumed.[4] So whenever a statement is retracted as having been made under unlawful inducement, the Court should have the Police-officers who had come into contact with the person, before him, for the purpose of searching by examining them as to the mode in which they had dealt with the accused and as to what led up to the making of confessions.[5] A Sessions Judge commits a grave error in law and procedure who refuses to enquire into the allegations of inducement, etc., and the circumstances under which a confession was made.[6] In order to make an act or omission amount to an inducement, threat or promise—

(1) It must be such as without it the person would not have made the statement.[7] It need not however be express but may be implied from the circumstances of the case. So where a person in authority used the words "the truth has come out and the villagers are being worried about the affair; you had better say what you know" it was held there was a veiled inducement and threat.[8] S. 163, Note 5.

(2) It must be such as would make the person suppose that the advantage to be gained or evil to be avoided would be of a temporal nature.[9]

(3) It must be sufficient in the opinion of the Court to make the accused suppose that he would get the advantage. It is left to the Court entirely to form its own opinion as to whether the inducement, threat or promise held out in any particular case is sufficient to lead the person to suppose that he would gain an advantage of a temporal nature.[10] In doing so the mind of the person making the statement has to be judged rather than that of the person in authority. That being so, not merely actual words, but words accompanied by acts or conduct as well on the part of the person in authority which may be construed by the accused, situated as he then is, as amounting to an inducement, threat or promise, will have to be taken into account. A perfectly innocent expression coupled with acts or conduct on the part of the person in authority together with the surrounding circumstances may amount to inducement, threat or promise. In scrutinising a case of this kind the Court will have to perform a threefold function. It will have to determine the sufficiency of inducement, threat or promise, as affording certain grounds. It will have to clothe itself with the mentality of the accused to see whether the grounds would appear to the accused reasonable for a supposition mentioned in the section. (Section 24 of the Evidence Act). Lastly it will have to judge as a Court if the confession appears to have been caused in consequence of inducement, threat or promise.[11]

The following have been held to be inducements within the meaning of S. 24 of the Evidence Act:—

(1) Offer of pardon[12] even though the offer of pardon turns out illegal as contravening the provisions of S. 337, infra.[13]

(5) The warning by a Magistrate "what you say would go against you so speak the truth".[35]

(6) The expression "unless you admit the guilt.....you would be dealt with severely and sent to jail".[36]

The expression "you had better tell the truth" has always been held to import a threat or promise and the expression. "I must know more about it" amounts to a threat.[37] A threat to put the women folk to trouble[38] or to detain the wife of the person illegally[39] or to implicate in a crime[40] or beating with a view to extort a confession[41] have all been held to render a confession inadmissible under S. 24 of the Evidence Act.

The following have been held not to be an inducement threat or promise rendering a statement inadmissible under S. 24 of the Evidence Act:—

(1) Moral exhortation to speak the truth.[42]

(2) Threat of excommunication for life.[43]

(3) Where the Magistrate said "if you want to make any statement of your own freewill you may do so." "If you admit any thing it will be recorded as evidence against you" and thereupon the accused said "I want to make a clean breast of everything for the reason that if I serve the Government in any way it may take pity on me" and confessed.[44]

(4) Where a person was told "or what you say will be used as evidence against you or for or against you".[45]

(5) Where a person was told "I know the whole thing now".[46]

The question therefore as to the effect of inducements, etc., on the admissibility of the statements made in the course of investigation is really of very little importance and is only of academical interest.

1. Legislative Changes.—

There was no provision corresponding to this section in the Code of 1861. It was introduced for the first time in the Code of 1872.

1. Changes made in the Code of 1882—

(1) After the words "Any Magistrate" the words "Not being a Police-officer" were added.

(2) The words "In the course of an investigation under this chapter or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial" in para. 2 were added.

(3) The words "it was taken in my presence.....of the statement made by him" were added in the form of the Memorandum.

2. Changes made in the Code of 1898—

(1) In sub-S. (1) the words "Every Magistrate" were substituted for the words "Any Magistrate".

(2) The explanation was newly added.

S. 164, Notes 1—3.

3. Changes made in 1923—

(1) In sub-S. (1) for the words "Every Magistrate not being a Police-officer may" the words "any Presidency Magistrate..... .....is not a Police-officer" were substituted.

(2) In sub-S. (3) before the words "No Magistrate" the words "A Magistrate shall.....against him and" were added.

(3) In the Memorandum in sub-S. (3) before the words "I believe" the words "I have explained.....evidence against him and" were added.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—Sections 24 to 30 of the Evidence Act deal with the relevancy and admissibility of confessions. This section provides the manner in which confessions and statements are to be recorded[1] and does not prevent the admissibility of confessions which are otherwise admissible under the Evidence Act.[2]

In recording a confession under this section, a Magistrate only exercises a power with which he is invested and as the jurisdiction and powers of a Magistrate are, under S. 12, supra, limited to the District in which he is appointed, he can exercise this power in such District only.[3]

3. Who can record a statement or confession.—Before the amendment of 1923 the section enabled every Magistrate (including a Third Class Magistrate) to record statements or confessions thereunder.[1] Under the present section as amended, the only Magistrates that can act under it are:—

(1) any Presidency Magistrate,

(2) any Magistrate of the first class, and

(3) any Magistrate of the second class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government.

A Third Class Magistrate cannot now act under this section.[2]

Can a Presidency Magistrate record a statement or confession made in the course of an investigation in the town of Calcutta or Bombay by the Police of Calcutta or Bombay? Before the amendment of 1923 it was held in the undermentioned cases[3] that inasmuch as S. 1, sub-S. (2) provided that nothing in the Code applied to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay, S. 164, did not apply to confessions made in the course of an investigation in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay and that the Presidency Magistrate could not therefore act under this section. In Emperor v. Panchkhari Dutt[4] a case decided after the amendment, Mukerji, J., held that the alteration of the section did not enable a Presidency Magistrate to act under this section where the investigation was made in Calcutta by the Police of Calcutta, the reason being that S. 164 is still subject to S. 1 which remains the same as before. The High Court of Patna, on the other hand, has taken a contrary view.[5]

4. 'If he is not a Police-officer'.—It is only a Magistrate that is not a Police-officer that can record a statement or confession under this section. Under S. 25 of the Evidence Act no confession made to a Police-officer can be proved against a person accused of any offence.[1-a] The mere fact that the Police-officer is also a Magistrate will not render the confession admissible in evidence. Thus a confession made to a Police patel in Bombay is inadmissible.[1] Similarly a confession made to a Deputy Superintendent of Police who is also a Magistrate is inadmissible.[2]

5. Magistrate acting under the section need not have jurisdiction in the case—Explanation.—Before the explanation was added to the section in 1898, there was a difference of opinion as to whether a Magistrate having no jurisdiction in the case could act under this section.[1] The addition of the present explanation now makes it clear that a Magistrate acting under this section need not necessarily be one having jurisdiction in the case.[2]

A Magistrate is not incompetent to act under this section merely because he—

(a) directs the police investigation[3], or

(b) is going to hold the preliminary inquiry afterwards[4] or

(c) has begun an enquiry into the guilt of persons alleged to have been confederates of the confessing prisoner.[5]

S. 164, Notes 6—7.

6. Confessions to Magistrates of foreign states—Admissibility in evidence.—The words "police-officer" and "Magistrate" in S. 26 of the Evidence Act include Police-officers and Magistrates of foreign states also.[1] Consequently the mere fact that a confession was made before a Magistrate of a foreign state does not render it inadmissible in evidence.[2] Though such a confession will not be entitled to the same weight as a confession recorded by a British Magistrate in strict compliance with the terms of S. 164 of the Code.[2-a] All that has to be seen in such cases is whether there is anything in the substantive or natural law to vitiate it.[2]

There is a difference of opinion as to whether such confession or statement can be presumed to be genuine under S. 80 of the Evidence Act. In Queen Empress v. Sunder Singh, I.L.R., 12 All. 595, it was held that it could be so presumed inasmuch as the word "Magistrate" in S. 80 included Magistrates of foreign states also. In the undermentioned case,[4] the High Court of Bombay held, however, that the word "Magistrate" in S. 80 did not include Magistrates of foreign states, that no presumption under that section can therefore be drawn, and that it is necessary to examine the Magistrate who took down the confession as a witness in the case before the document could be admitted in evidence. The same view has been taken by the High Court of Madras also.[5]

7. Statement or confession.—The section provides for the recording of confessions by accused persons and statements whether by an accused person or not which are not confessions.[1] The distinction is made for the purpose of prescribing different modes of record. A statement (which is not a confession) is to be recorded in the manner prescribed for recording evidence, while a confession should be recorded in the manner provided by sub-S. (2) of S. 364 of this Code.[2]

S. 164, Note 7.

S. 5 of the Oaths Act provides that no oath or affirmation shall be administered to an accused person and consequently a confession by an accused person cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for perjury under S. 193 of the Penal Code.[3] But a statement which is to be recorded in the manner prescribed for recording evidence, may be made the basis of a charge for perjury.[4]

Where a Magistrate not empowered to act under this section as, for instance, a third class Magistrate records a statement under this section, the statement cannot be said to have been taken in the course of a "judicial proceeding" and cannot form the basis of a charge of "giving false evidence in any stage of judicial proceeding" within the 1st part of S. 193 of the Penal Code.[5] Such statement may, however, form the basis of a charge of "giving false evidence in any other case" within the 2nd part of S. 193 of the Penal Code.[6]

A confession, in criminal law, means an admission of certain facts which constitute an offence, made by a person who is charged with the offence which is the subject matter of the statement.[6-a] Whether a statement is to be called a confession or not, depends not merely on the nature of the statement itself but on the use that was intended to be made of it. Whether a statement is taken as a statement or as a confession the record can be used only for the purpose for which it was taken.[7] A 'statement' which is not a confession as for example one which inculpates a co-accused but exculpates the person making it, cannot be used as a confession, whether against the person making it or against others accused person.[15]

S. 164, Notes 7—10.

8. Statement of approver on tender of pardon.—Before the amendment of S. 337 of the Code in 1923 it was held that a pardon could be tendered to an approver only during an inquiry and that consequently no confession by him could be recorded under the provisions of this section.[1] S. 337 as now amended enables the tender of pardon to be made at any stage of the investigation or inquiry and therefore where a pardon is tendered during investigation and the approver makes a statement there is no legal bar to its being recorded under this section.[2] But unless so recorded under this section, a statement of the approver on a tender of pardon under S. 337 is not governed by this section.[3]

9. "May record".—The section is merely an enabling one and it is not obligatory on the Magistrate to record a confession made to him.[1] In other words, the section permits Magistrates to record confessions without compelling them to do so.[2] An oral confession to a Magistrate is not in any way affected by the provisions of this section and is admissible in evidence under S. 26 of the Evidence Act.[3] It can be proved by the oral evidence of the Magistrate to whom it is made.[4] The High Court of Calcutta has however held that such oral statement or confession is inadmissible and cannot be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate.[5] It is submitted that the Calcutta view is not correct. As observed by Addison, J., in Abdulla v. Emperor,[6] "It would be anomalous . . . to hold that a confession made to an ordinary individual could be orally proved while a confession made either to a Magistrate not empowered to record confessions under S. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code or to a Magistrate empowered to record confessions under S. 164 could not be so proved."

10. "In the course of an investigation . . . inquiry or trial".—Under the Code of 1872 it was held that a confession if recorded by a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case should be treated as an examination under

S. 164, Note 10.

S. 193 of that Code (now S. 342) notwithstanding that police investigation had not concluded, and that in other cases it should be treated as a confession under this section.[1] The words "in the course of . . . enquiry or trial" were added in 1882 thus negativing the above view.

A confession, in order to come within this section must be made either—

(1) In the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV of the Code, or

(2) at any time afterwards and before the commencement of the inquiry or trial.[2]

Where a statement is made at a time when there is no investigation under Chap. XIV of the Code, it is not made under this section.[2-a] Thus a statement made in the course of a departmental investigation held for the purpose of granting sanction under S. 197, is not one made in the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV of the Code and is therefore not one under this section.[3] An investigation held by the Police of a foreign state is not one under Chap. XIV of the Code and a statement taken by a Magistrate of a foreign state in the course of such investigation is not under this section.[4] Where an accused person was arrested at Calcutta and produced by the Calcutta Police before the Calcutta Magistrate in pursuance of a request made by the Police of Burdwan—who were holding an investigation under Chap. XIV of the Code, it was held that the arrest and production of the accused must be considered as something done in the course of the investigation in Burdwan and that therefore S. 164 would apply.[4-a]

A statement of confession recorded after the commencement of the inquiry or trial is not within this section.[5] But the condition requiring the confession to be prior to the commencement of the inquiry or trial is only imposed when the investigation has ceased and not when the confession is made in the course of the investigation.[6] Thus where a charge is laid against two persons one of whom is absconding and the inquiry or trial commences as regards the accused apprehended, while investigation continues against the absconding accused, and in the course of such investigation the absconding accused is apprehended, and a confession, by him is recorded, such confession is properly one within this section.[7]

A statement made at an inquiry which is held before any investigation is held is not within this section. Thus a statement recorded in an inquiry under

S. 202 of the Code is not within this section.[8]

This section has no application where there is no record of any statement at all. Where the accused points out certain places to a Magistrate who makes notes in respect thereof, the accused cannot be said to have made any statement to the Magistrate under this section.[9]

S. 164, Notes 10—11.

11. Mode of recording and procedure.—Sub-S. (2) provides that statements should be recorded in the manner prescribed for recording evidence, viz., under Ss. 353 to 363 and confessions, as prescribed under S. 364, infra. The provision should be strictly followed.[1]

The word "record" means "write down" and not merely "file". Consequently the mere 'filing' of a confession already written and signed and handed over to the Magistrate does not amount to 'recording' a confession.[2] Even the writing out of the confession is not sufficient to make it a "record". The writing must be made a part of the judicial record.[3] Therefore, where a Magistrate writes out a confession, but refuses to make the memorandum under sub-S. (3), on the ground that the confession in his opinion has not been voluntarily made, such confession cannot form part of the judicial record and is therefore inadmissible in evidence.[4]

A confession not recorded in accordance with the provisions of this section is not admissible in evidence except where the defect is one which has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits and is cured by taking evidence that the statement was duly made.[5] (See S. 533, infra). Thus where is inadmissible in evidence unless cured under S. 533, infra. Where no record at all is made of a confession, S. 533 will not cure the defect.[12] Where an accused person is able to write his name his thumb impression is not a signature within the meaning of this section.[13]

It is of the essence of a confession made by the accused that it should be voluntarily made. It cannot be considered to be complete until signed by the accused person and this is inconsistent with the use of any compulsion or sanction for the purpose of obtaining such signature. An accused person therefore who refuses to sign a statement or a confession is not liable for punishment under S. 180, Penal Code.[14]

The record of a confession should be in plain and legible writing.[15]

Though there is no provision of law which forbids a Magistrate from recording a confession on a Sunday or any other holiday and at a place other than the open Court-house[16] it is not ordinarily proper to record a confession at night in a Police-station[17] or in the Magistrate's house.[18] If the matter is urgent and the surroundings have to be accepted as unavoidable, exceptional care should be taken to observe very strictly the directions prescribed by the rules for recording confessions.[19] But the mere fact that a confession was not recorded at the Court-house or in day time is not sufficient to show that it was not made voluntarily.[20]

Where the accused person is making a confession a third party should not be allowed to put or suggest questions to be put to the accused person.[21]

12. "Shall then be forwarded".—Under sub-S. (2) all statements and confessions recorded by a Magistrate shall, if he himself does not inquire into or try the case, be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be inquired into or tried. This provision is imperative[1] and where a Magistrate, after recording a confession, made it over to the Police-officers it was held that the procedure adopted was objectionable.[2]

13. Warning to accused.—Before the amendment of 1923, it was held that it was illegal for a Magistrate recording a confession to warn the accused

S. 164, Notes 13—14.

"not to expect any advantage or disadvantage therefrom"[1] or to say to the accused that everything he may say will go as evidence against him.[2] Under the section as amended, a Magistrate is required, before recording a confession, to explain to the accused, that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so, it may be used as evidence against him.[3] He is also bound to append a memorandum to the confession containing a clause to the effect that he has so explained the matter to the accused. Such a record is conclusive, in the absence of anything to the contrary, as to the fact that such a warning was given before the confession was recorded.[4] Where the accused is not told that he need not make a confession, his confession is inadmissible in evidence and S. 533 will not cure the defect.[5] Though where a warning is actually given but the record does not show it, the defect can be cured under S. 533 by the evidence of the Magistrate that he did give the warning.[6] The exact words of the warning are not material provided the Magistrate, recording the confession, explains and the person making it clearly understands that he need not make a confession.[7] It is not necessary that there should be any note of the warning at the beginning of the confession. It is sufficient if that is recorded in the memorandum which is required to be made at the foot.[8]

A Magistrate recording a confession should warn the accused that he is a Magistrate[9]; but there is no illegality in an omission to do so, when the accused is aware of that fact.[10]

14. Confession must be voluntary.—A Magistrate should not record any confession unless he has reason to believe that it is made voluntarily and he should therefore begin inquiry into that point before recording it.[1]

A confession which is recorded without asking questions as to its voluntariness is inadmissible in evidence and cannot be acted upon.[2] As to whether the defect is one that can be cured under S. 533, see Note 15. The Magistrate should record the circumstances under which confessions are made, showing in whose custody the prisoners were and how far they were free agents.[3] S. 164, Note 14.

If the Magistrate, after questioning the accused is not satisfied that a confession is voluntary and made without any pressure it is not admissible in evidence.[4]

If the Court sees any ground of exclusion mentioned in S. 24 of the Evidence Act such as inducement, threat or promise, it may reject the confession as not voluntary.[5] But a Magistrate is not justified in refusing to record the confession of an accused person on a mere suspicion of insanity. Such a statement may be useful to the accused as evidence that he was not in his right mind.[6]

In the case of a confession duly certified by the Magistrate, it may fairly be assumed that he did his best to assure himself that the statements were voluntary and that if he had any suspicion he would not have placed them on the record[7] though it is no conclusive proof.[8]

Where the certificate of the Magistrate states that the confession is not voluntary, it cannot be acted upon and is not curable under S. 533 of the Code.[9]

Rules issued by the Government under this section, for the recording of confessions, are intended for the guidance of Magistrates and have not the effect of law, and the mere omission to comply with them is not sufficient to rule out the confession if there had been no breach of the provisions of this section and if otherwise, there are grounds for believing that the confession was voluntarily made.[10]

15. "Upon questioning the person".—Where a Magistrate is asked to record a confession under this section, he should, before doing so, question the person making it with a view to find out whether it is made voluntarily.[1]

One of the important methods of finding this out is to question the accused as to his motive in making the confession and as to the circumstances under which the question of confession and the willingness of the accused to confess first arose.[2] The rule as to the necessity of questioning as to the motive, is, however, a rule of prudence and not of law.[2-a] No express form is prescribed for such questions and the extent to which a Magistrate should question the person making the confession must largely depend on the particular facts of each case. The Court must in each case satisfy itself that the Magistrate honestly believed and took steps to ascertain that the confession was a voluntary one.[3] It is desirable for this purpose that the Magistrate should put various questions to see if the confession is voluntary, but there is nothing in law which lays down that a Magistrate cannot satisfy himself by putting a single question to the accused.[4] The question put must be in pursuance of a real endeavour to find out the object of the confession and must be directed to eliciting facts which will enable the Magistrate to judge of the character of the confession that the accused is about to make. This cannot be done by merely a direction to make the statement voluntarily or by merely repeating some set formulae or asking him whether his confession is voluntary.[5] The Magistrate would be justified in, and ought to, in the ordinary performance of his duties, clear up any matter which is ambiguous on the face of the statement; but his position is merely that of a recording Magistrate; he is in no sense enquiring into the case and therefore he will be wholly unjustified in extracting by means of questions by way of cross-examination facts which the deponent has not spoken to before him[5-a] or which tend to incriminate himself.[6] Whether the questions put are such as may properly be put to the accused depends on the nature of the questions and the object of it and the mere fact that an answer was elicited by a question does not make the proceedings improper or the confession inadmissible.[7]

The failure of the Magistrate to question the accused before recording a confession is a defect of substance and cannot be cured by S. 533 of the Code where it prejudicially affects the accused as to his defence on the merits.[8]

It is always advisable to record the questions and answers by means of which a Magistrate satisfies himself that a confession is voluntary so that it may furnish data to the Court of Session and the High Court[9]; an omission however, so to record[10] or recording it at the end instead of at the beginning of the confession[11] is not a fatal defect but only an irregularity cured by S. 533 of the Code.

Similarly, where the accused is questioned after the confession is recorded, the defect is one of mere form and does not alter the character of the confession.[12]

Where an accused refuses to make a statement, the Magistrate should record that also.[13]

16. Memorandum at the foot of the confession.—When a Magistrate records any confession, he is required under the sub-section to make a memorandum, at the foot of such record, as prescribed therein. Such a memorandum need not be appended in the case of a record of a statement of a witness under this section.[1]

A confession without the memorandum or with a defective memorandum is inadmissible in evidence[2] unless the defects can be cured under S. 533 of the Code by the examination of the Magistrate who recorded it.[3]

The section does not require that the memorandum should be written by the Magistrate himself in his own hand. It is enough if it is signed by him.[4] But the Magistrate should use his own handwriting for his signature and not a lethographed stamp thereof.[5] S. 164, Notes 16—17.

Once a memorandum is made in accordance with this sub-section, the fact that it is attached to the English translation of the confession and not to the original vernacular confession itself, does not make the confession inadmissible.[6]

17. Confession immediately after Police custody.—Under S. 26 of the Evidence Act a confession made to a Magistrate even while the accused is in the custody of the Police-officer, is not inadmissible in evidence[1-a] much less can a confession made by an accused person, after he has been in police custody for some time be rejected on that sole ground.[1] It must, however be always viewed with great suspicion.[2] The Magistrate must be careful to ascertain how long such a person has been under influence of the police.[3] In recording a confession of a prisoner fresh from the hands of the police, the Magistrate would exercise a sound discretion, if before recording it, he gives the accused a short time to enable him to think over the question independent of the influence of the police and to decide whether he would make a confession or not.[4] As to the question of the amount of weight to be attached to a confession where the accused had never been out of police custody, would depend on the circumstances of each case. Where there is reason to apprehend that the influence of the police is still continuing on the mind of the accused the confession would have little weight, where on the other hand there is no such apprehension it may have greater weight.[5] Thus in a case where the accused was in the custody of the police for nearly three days without the order of the Magistrate and after he made the confession he was again remanded to police custody and the Magistrate did not remove the fear of the police from the prisoner's mind, before he recorded the confession, it was held that the confession, where it was retracted, should be rejected.[6] The same principle applies to statements written and signed by the accused while in the control of the police.[7] But the failure of the Magistrate to question a prisoner as to how long he was in custody[8] or the omission to record the fact that he was not in police custody at the time of making the confession[9] will not invalidate the confession otherwise duly made.

A confession recorded,

(1) in the presence of the Police-officer having the custody of the prisoner,[10] or

(2) after allowing the Police-officer to put questions[11], or

(3) by using a Police-officer as a scribe[12], or

(4) after the perusal of statements alleged to have been made by the accused to the police and recorded by them[13] could not safely be relied upon.

The presence, of a police man, not investigating the case, but in charge of sub-jail and accompanying the prisoner, will not invalidate the confession recorded in his presence.[14] Where a prisoner in police custody is brought before a Magistrate for the purpose of having his confession recorded he does not cease to be in the custody of the police merely because the Police-officer is not in the room but waits outside the room or in the next room.[15] Though sub-S. (3) deals with confessions only yet the principle would apply to cases of statements by witnesses also. No statement should be recorded under this section unless the person making it is a free agent and voluntarily agrees to have his statement taken down.[16] This section is not intended to enable the police to obtain an incriminating statement from some person and as it were to put a seal on that statement by sending that person in custody to a Magistrate to be examined. A statement so obtained always raises a suspicion that it is not voluntary.[17]

Magistrates, have the power to exclude the police or any other persons from Court, when recording a confession for the purpose of ensuring the voluntary character of the statements. They should, however, not do so when such exclusion will render the statements of witnesses incomplete without their presence.[18] S. 164, Notes 17—18.

and ascertain before acting upon it whether the confession was not the result of such undue influence[5] and at such an inquiry it is desirable that the jury, are out of Court.[6]

A confession made by an accused person before a Magistrate but retracted at once, when it was being read over to him[7] or while the certificate was being written[8] does not amount to a confession at all.

19. Confession of co-accused.—S. 30 of the Evidence Act provides as follows:—"Where more persons than one are being jointly tried for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some others of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession".

As to the evidentiary value of such confession, see the undermentioned cases.[1]

165. Whenever an officer in charge of a Police-station, or a Police-officer making an investigation, considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorized to investigate, and there is reason to believe that a person to whom a summons or order under S. 94 has been or might be issued will not or would not produce such document or other thing as directed in the summons or order, or when such document or other thing is not known to be in the possession of any person, such officer may search, or cause search to be made, for the same, in any place within the limits of the station of which he is in charge, or to which he is attached.

Search by Police-officer.

Such officer shall, if practicable, conduct the search in person.

If he is unable to conduct the search in person, and there is no other person competent to make the search present at the time, he may require any officer subordinate to him to make the search, and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer an order in writing, specifying the document or other thing for which search is to be made, and the place to be searched; and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such thing in such place.

The provisions of this Code as to search-warrants shall, so far as may be, apply to a search made under this section.

Police-officer making investigation, may require any officer subordinate to him to make the search; and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer an order in writing, specifying the property for which search is to be made and the house or place to be searched, and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such property in such house or place.

The provisions of Ss. 382 to 385 (both inclusive), relating to search-warrants, shall be applicable to a search made under this section by or under the direction of an Officer-in-charge of a Police-station, or by a Police-officer making an investigation.

Issue of search-warrants by Officer-in-charge of Police station.

142. Whenever an Officer-in-charge of a Police-station shall consider that the production of anything is essential to the conduct of an enquiry into any offence which he is authorised to investigate, it shall be lawful for him to search or cause a search to be made for the same, in any house or place within the limits of such station. In such case, the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station shall, if practicable, conduct the search for such thing in person. If unable to conduct the search in person, and there is no other person competent to make the search present at the time, it shall be lawful for the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station to require any officer subordinate to him to make the search, and he shall deliver to such officer an order in writing, specifying the property for which search is to be made and the house or place to be searched, and it shall thereupon be lawful for such Subordinate-officer to search for such property in such house or place. The provisions of Ss. 122, 123, 124, and 125 of this Act relating to search warrants, shall be applicable to a search made by or under the direction of an Officer-in-charge of a Police-station under this section.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in the Code of 1872—

There was no material difference between the provisions of S. 142 of the Code of 1861 and S. 379 of the Code of 1872 corresponding to the provisions of this section.

Changes made in the Code of 1882—

(1) The words "any document or thing" were substituted for the word "anything".

(2) The words "and there is reason to believe . . . to be in the possession of any person" were added after the words "he is authorised to investigate".

Changes introduced in the Code of 1898—

There was no change made in the Code of 1898.

Changes introduced in 1923—

(1) Sub-S. (1) was practically recast, the chief changes being the provision for a record of the grounds of belief for making a search and for specification of the thing to be searched.

(2) In sub-S. (3), the words "after recording in writing his reasons for so doing" were added.

(3) In sub-S. (4), after the words "search warrants" the words "and the general provisions as to searches contained in Ss. 102 and 103" were added.

(4) Sub-S. (5) was newly added.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—Sections 96, 98, 99-A and 100 ante, deal with searches under a warrant from a Magistrate and S. 105, ante deals with a search by the Magistrate himself. This section deals with searches made by an officer in charge of a Police-station or a Police-officer without any warrant from a Magistrate. Only a Police-officer can make a search under this section. A Magistrate cannot do so, but can only act under S. 105, ante.[1]

See also S. 153, ante, for power of the police to search for and inspect weights and measures. As to search by the police under Special or Local Laws, see Note 14 to S. 96, ante and the following cases.[2]

3. "Police-Officer making an investigation".—A police constable deputed by his superior to make an inquiry is "a Police-officer making an investigation" and as such is authorised to conduct a search under this section.[1]

4. "Any offence which he is authorised to investigate".—Before the section can be brought into operation, there must have been an offence committed which the Police-officer is authorised to investigate.[1] A Police-officer, therefore cannot make a search under this section in a non-cognizable case, as he cannot investigate into such an offence without an order from a Magistrate.[2] Nor can he make a search for stolen property where he has no information at all of the theft of the same.[3]

5. "Anything necessary for the purpose of investigation".—The section permits a search for anything necessary for the purposes of an investigation into any offence.[1] It obviously includes a search for some document or for some tangible object such as may be summoned to be produced by a Court under S. 94, supra.[2] The word "thing" would not include the inspection of any place inside a house or the configuration of a wall for the purpose of investigation and an entry into a house for that purpose is not contemplated by this section.[3]

6. "In any place within the limits of the Police-station of which he is in charge".—A Police-officer has no power to make a search under this section beyond the local limits of his own jurisdiction.[1] Where a search has to be made outside such local limits, he has to proceed as provided for by S. 166, infra.

7. "Any place," if includes the house of the accused.—Reading this section with Ss. 94 and 96, ante, it will be clear that "any place" will include the house of an accused person also.[1] A search, therefore, under this section can be made of the house of an accused person.[2]

8. "After recording in writing the grounds of his belief".—Under the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, a search for anything necessary for an investigation could be made only when there was a reasonable belief that a person to whom a summons or order could be issued, under S. 94, would not produce the thing[1] or when such 'thing' is not known to be in the possession of any person. Under the present section a Police-officer, may make a search when he has reasonable grounds for believing that anything necessary for the purposes of investigation may be found in any place within the limits of the Police-station of which he is in charge and that in his opinion it cannot be otherwise obtained.[2] He is bound first to record in writing the grounds of his belief that the search was necessary; he will be acting illegally if he does not so record.[3] The recording can, however, be done at any place or at any time prior to the actual search.[4]

9. "Search".—See Notes 10 to 15, infra.

10. Nature of search.—Even the section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, authorised a search only for "any document or thing", (i.e.,) a specific document or thing which might be the subject-matter of a summons or order under S. 94 or that might be necessary for the conduct of an investigation into an offence. It did not authorise a general search on the chance that something might be found,[1] that is, a search not in respect of specified documents or things, but a roving inquiry for the purpose of discovering documents or things which might involve persons in criminal liability.[2]

S. 165, Notes 10—14.

Since the amended S. 96, supra, permitted a general search, it was found necessary to amend this section so as to authorise a search only for specified things in a specified place. The words "and specifying in such writing —to be made" make this clear. So under the amended section also, the section does not authorise a search for stolen property or for property generally, but only a search for specified stolen articles,[3] or anything necessary for the purposes of an investigation.[4]

11. Who can conduct the search.—The search under this section may be conducted by the officer in charge of a Police-station or a Police-officer making an investigation into an offence. Where such a Police-officer is unable to conduct the search in person, he can by an order in writing and after recording his reasons, depute any officer subordinate to him to make the search—sub-S. (3).

Under S. 551, infra, Police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a Police-station may exercise the same powers throughout the local area to which they are appointed and therefore any superior Police-officer, for example, a Circle Inspector of Police, is competent to conduct the search under this section.[1]

12. Conduct of search—Sub-S. (4).—Sub-S. (4) makes the provisions of this Code as to search warrants, i.e., Ss. 96, 98, 99-A, 100 and 101 and the general provisions as to searches contained in Ss. 102 and 103 applicable to searches under this section. So a Police-officer is bound in making a search under this section, to call upon two or more respectable witnesses as provided in S. 103 to attend and witness the search.[1]

The provisions of this sub-section are not however imperative as the sections referred to therein are made applicable only so far as may be. The mere fact therefore that the police took two independent witnesses and did not call upon two witnesses from the locality[2] or the failure to call witnesses[3] does not make the search illegal.

See further Notes to Ss. 102 and 103, supra.

13. Inspection of things seized in search.—Where a document or other thing is seized under this section and sent to the Magistrate under S. 170, the prosecutor would have an opportunity of inspection in the very nature of things.[1]

See further Note 19 to S. 96, ante.

14. Resistance to illegal search.—The provisions contained in sub-Ss. (1), (3) and (5), of this section are so strict that a search in contravention of those provisions will be illegal and resistance to such search will not be an offence, either under Ss. 353 or 332 of the Penal Code.[1]

See also, Note 27 to S. 96, ante.

15. Damages for illegal search.—A Police-officer before ordering the search of a man's house should take care to see that there are reasonable and sufficient grounds for his proceedings. Otherwise he will be liable to be called upon to justify his act in a suit brought against him, and may have to pay damages.[1] So also a Police-officer is liable who makes a search under this section in a non-cognizable case, and without an order from the Magistrate.[2] If, however, the search by a Police-officer is a bona fide one, he is not liable for damages.[3]

Where a Police-officer not having jurisdiction over the place searched helps in a search conducted by another Police-officer who is authorised to conduct the search, he is not liable in damages as one making an illegal search.[4]

16. "In person"—Sub-S. (2).—Sub-S. (2) provides that a Police-officer proceeding under sub-S. (1), shall conduct the search in person. This means that the officer should be present on the spot and exercise a general supervision over the search in contradistinction to the cases where he is unable to go to the spot and deputes a subordinate by a written order to conduct the search in his place. It does not lay down that he should conduct himself the search, e.g., ransack the boxes, examine the roof, dig up the floor or otherwise seek the property.[1]

Where two houses have to be searched simultaneously and the Sub-Inspector searches one house and orders his constable to search the other, the procedure is not illegal.[2]

S. 165, Notes 17—18.

17. "An order in writing"—Sub-S. (3).—Where the Police-officer cannot himself go to the spot for the search, he can under this sub-section depute a subordinate officer to do the search, by an order in writing specifying the place to be searched and the thing for which the search is to be made[1] and after recording his reasons for so doing.

A subordinate Police-officer, though he is not empowered without an order in writing to search for property, can however enter a house without any warrant or order the search of a person who is charged with a cognizable offence.[2]

As to the effect of the non-compliance with these provisions, see Note 14, ante.

18. "Copies of records"—Sub-S. (5).—The new provisions in this sub-section are intended as an additional safeguard to protect individuals against general or roving searches. It is therefore made essential that a Police-officer conducting a search should send forthwith to the nearest Magistrate copies of the records that he has prepared before the search.[1]

An order by a Magistrate in contravention of this sub-section refusing or passing an order tantamount to the refusal of copies of records made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) to the owner or occupier of the place searched, is illegal and will be set aside.[2]

When officer in charge of police-station may require another to issue search-warrant.

166*. (1) An officer in charge of a police-station or a police-officer not being below the rank of Sub-Inspector making an investigation may require an officer in charge of another police-station, whether in the same or a different district, to cause a search to be made in any place, in any case in which the former officer might cause such search to be made, within the limits of his own station.

When officer of Police-station may require another to issue search warrant.

380. An Officer-in-charge of a Police-station may require an Officer-in-charge of another Police-station, whether subordinate to the same Magistrate as himself or to a Magistrate of another district, to cause a search to be made in any house or place, in any case in which the former officer might cause such search to be made within the limits of his own station.

Such officer, on being so required, shall proceed according to the provisions of S. 379; and shall forward the thing found, if any, to the officer at whose request the search was made.

SYNOPSIS.

	Note No.
LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2
SUB-S. (4)—FAILURE TO SEND COPIES OF RECORDS TO THE MAGISTRATE	3

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Code of 1861 and that of 1872—

A provision corresponding to the second paragraph of this section was newly added in 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872, 1882 and 1898—

There was no material difference between the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1872, 1882 and 1898.

Amendments in 1923—

(1) The words "or a Police-officer not being below the rank of a Sub-Inspector making an investigation" have been newly added in sub-section (1).

(2) Sub-Ss. (3), (4) and (5) are new.

2. Scope of the section.—S. 165, ante deals with the powers of a Police-officer in charge of a Police-station to make a search within the limits of his station. This section deals with his powers to have a search made within the limits of a station outside his own. For this purpose he may require the officer in charge of that station to cause a search to be made and such officer shall cause it to be made in the manner provided for in S. 165.

Before the amendment of 1923 an officer in charge of one station, could under no circumstances himself proceed to make a search within the limits of another station.[1] Sub-S. (3) now provides that in the circumstances specified therein, he might do so. If he does so he should send a notice of the search and a search list to the officer in charge of the station within the limits of which the search was made, and also send copies of the records prepared under S. 165, sub-Ss. (1) and (3) to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence.

When one officer of a Police-station may require another to issue a search warrant.

S. 166, Note 3

3. Sub-S. (4)—Failure to send copies of records to the Magistrate.—Sub-S. (4) is new and is obviously intended as an additional safeguard to protect individuals against general or roving searches. The omission to comply with the provisions of this clause will render a conviction for resistance to the search, liable to be set aside.[1]

S. 167.

Procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty-four hours.

167. (1) Whenever it appears that any investigation under this Chapter cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by S. 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded, the officer in charge of the police-station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused (if any) to such Magistrate.

167*. (1) Whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody, and it appears that the investigation * * * cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by S. 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded, the officer in charge of the police-station or the police-officer making the investigation if he is not below the rank of Sub-Inspector shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused * * to such Magistrate.

167. Whenever it appears that any investigation under this chapter cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by S. 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation is well-founded, the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused to such Magistrate.

Procedure when investigation cannot be completed in twenty-four hours.

The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this section may, whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case, from time to time authorize the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding

(CODE OF 1872—S. 124, Paras. 2, 3 and 4.)

Accused not to be detained by police more than twenty-four hours without special authority.

124. If the investigation has not been completed within the twenty-four hours and no such special order has been passed, and if there are grounds for believing that the accusation is well founded, the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station shall forward the accused person to the Magistrate having jurisdiction, with a statement of the offence for which he has been arrested.

A Magistrate authorizing detention under this section shall record his reasons for so doing.

If such order be given by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate of the district or of a division of a district, he shall forward a copy of his order, with his reasons for making it, to the Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

1. Scope and object of the section.—

See Note 16 to S. 344, infra.

The provisions of this section are to be read as supplementary to those contained in S. 61, supra.[1] The object of these provisions of law is to see that persons arrested by the police are brought before a Magistrate with the least possible delay,[2] in order to enable the latter to judge if such person has to be further kept in police custody, and also to enable such person to make any

(CODE OF 1861—S. 152.)

152. No Police-officer shall, without the special order of a Magistrate, detain an accused person in custody for a longer period than, under all the circumstances of the case, is reasonable: such period in no case to exceed twenty-four hours. If the enquiry has not been completed within twenty-four hours, the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station shall, nevertheless, forward the accused to the Magistrate with a short despatch stating the offence for which the accused has been arrested, if there are grounds for believing that the accusation is well founded.

Accused not to be detained by the police beyond 24 hours without special authority.

representation he may wish to make in the matter.[3] By these provisions it is intended to prevent the possible abuse by the police of their powers in trying to make discoveries of crime by means of duress, terror and wrongful confinement.[4] This section provides that in certain cases detention in police custody of the arrested person may be permitted so that the police may complete the investigation and decide whether to proceed under S. 169 or S. 170.[5] S. 167, Notes 1—6.

S. 344, infra, gives to Magistrates analogous powers of remand.

2. Difference between this section and S. 344.—See Note 17 to S. 344, infra.

3. "Or the Police-officer making the investigation if he is not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector".—These words have been newly added by the Amending Act of 1923. Before the amendment, only the officer in charge of a Police-station could send the arrested person before a Magistrate for remand under this section. This section applies only when the police are investigating the case; a Magistrate who makes an investigation under S. 202 cannot under this section keep the accused person in custody.[1] An officer attached to the Criminal Investigation or Intelligence Department working under the orders of his superior cannot be taken to be an investigating officer; he is asked to do only particular acts, e.g., to make a search.[2] As to who can apply for remand under the Local Police Codes see the undermentioned cases.[3]

4. "Shall forthwith forward the accused".—The word "accused" in this section and in Ss. 169, 170 and 173 denotes the supposed offender who has not yet come under the cognizance of any official but the police and who in Chapter V is called "person arrested".[1]

It does not rest in the discretion of the Police-officer to keep the prisoner in custody where and as long as he pleases. Under no circumstances, can he be retained for more than 24 hours without the special leave of the Magistrate under this section. Any longer detention is absolutely unlawful.[2] The accused should actually be sent before the Magistrate; the police cannot have the accused in their custody and merely write for and obtain the special leave under this section for such detention.[3]

5. "With copies of entries in the diary".—It is imperative that the Police-officer should send along with the accused a copy of the entries in the diary which he is bound to keep under S. 172, infra. The entries in the diary afford to the Magistrate the information upon which he can decide whether or not he should authorise the detention of the accused person in custody or upon which he can form an opinion as to whether or not further detention is necessary.[1]

6. "To any Magistrate having jurisdiction or not".—If the police consider that detention of an accused in their custody, is necessary, they must take the accused to the nearest Magistrate whether he has or has not jurisdiction, to try the case.[1] This latitude is merely to provide for cases in which it might not be possible to approach the Magistrate having jurisdiction owing to distance or similar difficulties.[2] In the absence of such difficulties it is desirable that the Magistrate of the illaqa should be approached and the practice of obtaining an order of detention from any Magistrate at the choice of the police is open to objection.[3]

A Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, who is a Justice of the Peace, cannot order the detention of the arrested person in police custody.[4]

7. "Fifteen days in the whole".—The longest period for which an accused can be ordered to be detained in police custody by one or more such orders is only 15 days.[1] It was so held under the 1861 Code[2] where the time limit was not fixed; and also under the Code of 1882[3] where the words " in the whole" were absent.

Where even within the 15 days time allowed under this section, the investigation is not complete, the police may release the accused under S. 169, or may send him to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case or hold an inquiry with a report under S. 173, and then the Magistrate may remand the accused under S. 344.[4] But such remand will not be to police custody. A detention under this section to the police custody for more than 15 days is illegal.[5]

8. Reasons to be recorded.—Sub-S. (3) requires that when the Magistrate authorises detention in police custody, he should record his reasons for so doing. The object of this provision is to see that the Magistrate takes the trouble to study the police diaries and to ascertain the actual conditions under which such detention is asked for.[1] The law is jealous of the liberty of the subject and does not allow detention unless there is a legal sanction for it.[2] So in every case where a detention in police custody is ordered under this section the Magistrate should state his reasons clearly.[3] He should satisfy himself (a) that the accusation is well-founded,[4] and (b) that the presence of the accused is necessary while the police investigation is being held,[5] as for example, where some property has to be recovered or produced by the accused.[6] The mere fact that the police state that the presence of the accused is necessary to finish the investigation, is not sufficient to order detention.[7] To order a detention of the accused in order to get from him a confessional statement or that he may be forced to give a clue to stolen property is most objectionable.[8] Similarly it is improper to order detention in police custody on a mere expectation that time will show his guilt[9] or for the reason that the accused promised to tell the truth[10] or for verifying a confession recorded under S. 164[11] or for the reason that though repeatedly asked the accused will not give any clue to the property.[12]

It is improper for a Magistrate to authorise detention in police custody without recording special reasons.[13] But the mere omission to record reasons where it appears that the Magistrate has made the order after due consideration, does not make such detention illegal[14] nor will such detention be illegal within the meaning of S. 491, infra.[15] Magistrates ordering detention should always be careful to ascertain how long the persons have been in police custody and influence.[16] Where there are good reasons for remand under this section, a Magistrate should invariably limit the term of detention as much as possible to what may be necessary for the object in view.[17]

9. Effect of detention in contravention of this section.—Where a Police-officer detains a person for a period more than that fixed in S. 61, the detention is illegal[1] and the officer is liable to punishment under S. 29 of the Police Act (Act V of 1861).[2] It is not necessary to prove that the Police-officer detained the accused with any guilty konwledge.[3] If the detention is for the purpose of wrongfully obtaining a confession or some property from the accused, the Police-officer may render himself liable to be punished under Ss. 347 and 348 of the Penal Code.[4]

10. Nature of proceedings under this section.—A Magistrate ordering a detention under this section acts in his judicial and not executive capacity.[1] An application by the police for an order of detention under this section is a proceeding within the meaning of S. 340 (1), infra, and the accused is entitled to be represented by counsel in such proceeding.[2] The police should not refuse

Applicability of this section to security proceedings.—Before the amendment of this section in 1923, it was held that the section applied only where the investigations were held "under this chapter" and did not therefore apply to proceedings under Chapter VIII (Security proceedings).[1] The words "under this chapter" have now been omitted.

1. Legislative changes.—The words "or, to the officer making the investigation" are newly added by the Amending Act of 1923.

2. Scope of the section.—Ss. 169, 170 and 173 should be read together, S. 169 relates to cases in which it is found that there is no sufficient evidence for forwarding the accused to a Magistrate, and consequently no person is sent up for trial. S. 170 applies to cases in which upon investigation the accused is sent up for trial. S. 173 contains general directions relating to both.[1]

This section is applicable while the case is still under investigation of the police. It cannot be employed after the accused has appeared before the Magistrate.[2] The reason is that the accused having surrendered himself to the Court, it is for the Court to decide whether to release him or not.

3. Insufficiency of evidence.—Where after the completion of investigation it is found that there is no sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the sending up of the accused, the accused must be released.[1]

Procedure of police in case of deficient evidence.

125. If it appears to the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the transmission of an accused person to the Magistrate, such officer shall release the accused person on bail or on his own recognizance, to appear when required, and shall submit a report of the case for the orders of the Magistrate having jurisdiction. Such report shall be submitted through the superior officer of police mentioned in S. 117, who may, pending the orders of the Magistrate, give instructions as to the conduct of the investigation.

(1) (1914) 1914 All. 413 (413), Emperor v. Ganesh.

When an investigating officer reports to a Magistrate that there is no sufficient evidence against an accused, the Magistrate cannot order his further detention to enable the police to institute proceedings under S. 110, supra.[2] S. 169, Notes 3—6.

4. Surety bond to appear before a Magistrate.—The section authorises the taking of a bond with or without sureties for the appearance of the accused before a Magistrate empowered to act on a police report. Therefore, a bond taken under this section for the appearance of an accused before the police is ab initio void.[1] Moreover, a Police-officer cannot take a third party's bond for the appearance of the accused without taking a bond from the accused himself for his appearance, because there cannot be a surety without a principal.[2]

5. Re-arrest of the person released under this section.—The admission to bail under this section is only a provisional arrangement. The Magistrate to whom the report is sent under S. 173 may either discharge the bond or order the re-arrest of the accused. If the Magistrate believes that there is a prima facie case of a non-cognizable offence, the police should re-arrest the accused and forward him in custody to the Magistrate.[1]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[2] that where a person is apprehended along with others and is released by the police under this section, it is unfair to launch a prosecution against such person based upon facts disclosed in the evidence which he gives against the accused.

6. Power of Police-officer to allow withdrawal of complaint.—Permission to withdraw a complaint is a judicial act, the exercise of which is vested in Magistrates under Ss. 248 and 345, infra, and the police have no authority to entertain an application for withdrawal under this or any other section[1]

When the Officer in charge of a Police-station forwards an accused person to a Magistrate, or takes security for his appearance before such Magistrate under this section, he shall send to such Magistrate any weapon or other article which it may be necessary to produce before him, and shall require the complainant (if any), and so many of the persons who appear to such officer to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case as he may think necessary, to execute a bond to appear before the Magistrate, and prosecute or give evidence (as the case may be) in the matter of the charge against the accused.

If the Court of the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate be mentioned in the bond, such Court shall be held to include any Court to which such Magistrate may refer the case for inquiry or trial, provided reasonable notice of such reference be given to such complainant or persons.

The day fixed under this section shall be the day whereon the accused person is to appear, if security for his appearance has been taken, or the day on which he may be expected to arrive at the Court of the Magistrate, if he is to be forwarded in custody.

The officer in whose presence the bond is executed shall deliver a copy thereof to one of the persons who executed it and shall then send to the Magistrate the original with its report.

Complainants and witnesses to execute recognizances to appear.

If the Court of the Magistrate of the District, or of a Magistrate of a division of a District, be inserted in the bond, it shall be held to include any Court to which such Magistrate may refer the case for inquiry or trial, provided notice be given to such complainant or witness.

Such day shall be the day whereon the accused person is to appear, if he had been admitted to bail, or the day on which he may be expected to arrive at the Court of the Magistrate, if he is to be forwarded in custody.

The Officer in whose presence the recognizance is executed shall, after delivering to the complainant or one of the witnesses a duplicate thereof, send it with his report to the Magistrate having jurisdiction.

S. 170, Notes 1—4.

1. Legislative changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

The words corresponding to sub-S. 3 were not found in the Code of 1861, but were inserted in the Code of 1872.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

The provision that the Police-officer shall take security from the accused and release him on bail where the offence is bailable and the accused is able to give security was first introduced in 1882.

Difference between the Codes of 1882 and 1898—

There is no change between the Codes of 1882 and 1898.

Amendment in 1926—Sub-S. (4) has been repealed by Act II of 1926.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section enables an officer in charge of a Police-station, if there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground to justify the sending up of the accused, to forward him under custody to a Magistrate empowered to take the cognizance of the offence upon a police report. It is not necessary that the investigation should have been completed at that time nor is it necessary to send a final report under S. 173 at the same time.[1]

For a fuller discussion, see Note 16 to S. 344, infra.

The procedure prescribed under this section applies also to investigations conducted in a non-cognizable case under the orders of a Magistrate.[2] It also applies to arrests made under Ss. 37 and 41 of the Excise Act (Act XII of 1896)[3] and to reports in respect of investigations conducted by the police under the Madras Salt Act.[4]

3. Accused must be forwarded to Magistrate having jurisdiction.—An accused can, under this section, be forwarded only to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, upon a police report, and to try or commit him for trial. It is irregular to send the accused and the witnesses before another Magistrate who is not so empowered.[1] As to reports under what sections of the Code is contemplated by the words "police-report", see S. 190, infra.

The power of Police-officers to take bail is regulated by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Hence it was held that a Magistrate cannot authorise a Police constable to admit to bail persons sent up to him by Police patels under the provisions of Bombay Act VIII of 1867 for offences for which bail may be allowed by the Code of Criminal Procedure.[2]

4. Powers and duties of the Police under this section.—It is for the officer in charge of a Police-station to decide whether there is sufficient evidence or not to justify the forwarding of the accused.[1] The power cannot be exercised by a subordinate officer and proceedings instituted by him will be void under S. 530, Cl. (p)[2]. Nor can the power be controlled by the Superintendent of Police, especially after it has been exercised.[3]

When however he considers that there is such evidence he is bound under the imperative provisions of this section to forward the accused in custody or, if the offence is bailable, to take bail for his appearance before the Magistrate.[4] He cannot, for instance, discharge the accused nor entertain an application to withdraw the complaint inasmuch as the power to permit such withdrawal is a judicial act which must be done by a Magistrate.[4-a]

He is bound to send all persons acquainted with the facts of the case as witnesses at the trial and cannot omit to do so on the ground that some of the witnesses are relations of the accused.[4-b]

It is not the duty of the officer to intimate to the accused the offence with which he is charged. But he is bound to intimate to him whether the warrant is bailable or not.[5]

5. Accused—Meaning of.—The word "accused" as used in this chapter relating to investigations, means a person against whom there has been an accusation and as used in the chapters relating to inquiries and trials, means, a person over whom the Magistrate or Court is exercising jurisdiction.[1]

6. Bond by witnesses.—This section requires that when the accused person is forwarded to the Magistrate or released on security, for his appearance, the officer in charge of the Police-station shall require the complainant and witnesses to execute a bond for their appearance before the Magistrate. To send up an accused without such bonds being taken is illegal.[1] The stage when the bond from a witness or complainant is to be taken comes in only when the accused is arrested and is either forwarded under custody or is released on security. Otherwise the bond is not one furnished under this section.[2]

The bond taken under this section from a witness or complainant should specify the particular day on which he has to appear before the Magistrate.[3] Such date must be the date on which the accused is expected to appear before the Magistrate or if a security for his appearance has been taken, the date of his appearance.[4]

For form of bond by a witness or complainant, see Form 26, Schedule IV.

Daily record of proceedings.

154. A Police-officer making an enquiry under this chapter, shall day by day enter his proceedings in a diary, setting forth the time at which the complaint or other information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his enquiry, the place or places visited by him, and a statement of the circumstances elicited by his enquiry and shall forward day by day a copy of such diary to the District Superintendent of Police, who shall without delay bring to the notice of the Magistrate of the District any part of such diary which he shall consider it to be important that such Magistrate shall know. The Magistrate of the District shall be entitled to call for and inspect such diary. In cases where there is no District Superintendent of Police, the Police-officer shall forward day by day a copy of the diary to the Magistrate of the District. Such diary shall not be evidence of the facts stated therein, except against the Police-officer who made it.

departmental submission and empowered any Court to send for the police diary of a case under enquiry or trial in such Court, the diaries to be used not as evidence in the case, but to aid the Court in such enquiry or trial. In the Code of 1861, it had merely been enacted that the diary should not be evidence of the facts stated therein except against the Police-officer who made it.[1]

2. Scope and object of the section.—The object of the section in providing for the maintenance, by the Police-officer, of a diary of his proceedings has been stated by Edge, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Mannu,[1] as follows:—

"The early stages of investigation which follows on the commission of a crime must necessarily in the vast majority of cases be left to the police, and until the honesty, the capacity, the discretion and judgment of the police can be thoroughly trusted it is necessary, for the protection of the public against criminals, for the vindication of the law and for the protection of those who are charged with having committed a criminal offence that the Magistrate or Judge before whom the case is for investigation or for trial should have the means of ascertaining what was the information, true, false, or misleading, which was obtained from day to day by the Police-officer who was investigating the case and what were the lines of investigation upon which such Police-officer acted."

It is therefore essential that the diary should be kept strictly in accordance with the Code especially as it is frequently of use in difficult cases in enabling the Court to judge of the weight to be attached to the evidence.[2]

The section applies to Police-officers making investigations under this chapter. These will include investigation into cognizable cases under S. 156 and even into non-cognizable cases under the orders of a Magistrate under S. 155, sub-S. (2). In either case, the Police-officer is charged with the duty of maintaining a diary.[3] The omission to maintain it deprives the Court of a very valuable aid which such diaries can give if legitimately used.[4]

The section does not apply to personal diaries maintained by a Police-officer not conducting any investigation.[5] Nor does the section apply to a departmental enquiry.[5-a] The section applies to all Police-officers making an investigation.[5-b]

A diary prepared by the police under S. 47-A of the Calcutta Suburban Police Act, III of 1888 does not fall under either S. 172 or S. 162, Cr. P. Code, and is not privileged.[6] It has been held also that these two sections do not apply to the Calcutta Police and that there is nothing in the Calcutta Police

Act, IV of 1861, relating to any confidential diary which cannot be reached by any party in a crimial case.[7]

As to use of panchnamas prepared in the course of an investigation, see the undermentioned case.[8]

2-A. "Day by Day."—Police-officers are required to enter proceedings in a diary from day to day.[1] Where there is a delay in making the entry, the circumstance is calculated to throw suspicion on the diary.[2]

3. Contents of Diary.—The diary should set forth the proceedings day by day of investigating officer and must record inter alia the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him and circumstances ascertained through his investigation.[1] The section does not contain an exhaustive list of the matters which may, with propriety, be entered. There is much which may tend to the furtherance of the objects for which a diary has been instituted which would not fall within the language of the section, but which may, with great advantage, be entered, and when so entered, would be privileged.[2]

As to whether statements of witnesses may be recorded in the diary and the effect of such record, see Notes to S. 162, ante.

4. Admissibility of diary in evidence.—Entries in the diary prepared under this section are only notes of secondary evidence of witnesses who can be examined in the first instance, and whose evidence, if necessary, should be taken in open Court in the presence of the accused.[1] They cannot therefore be used either as substantive or as corroborative evidence in the case,[2] or read to the jury.[3] Nor can the Court look into them and take the facts and statements written therein as materials which would help it to come to a finding on the evidence in the case.[4] The reason is that to test the evidence by means of the diaries is to use them as evidence.[5] Thus, to believe the evidence of a prosecution witness because a perusal of the diary shows that he was examined at the earliest possible opportunity and he made the statement to the police, is an improper use of the diary.[6] Conversely, to reject the story of the defence on the ground that it is nowhere mentioned in the diary is also an improper use thereof.[7] What the Court can do is to discover out of the diary any matter that is important and then by calling for the necessary witnesses or documents, to have that matter properly proved in evidence.[8] Consent cannot legalise the use of diaries as evidence.[9] But when a diary was referred to by a Magistrate as corroborative evidence, but there was legal evidence to help him to come to the same finding, the High Court declined to interfere.[10] S. 172, Notes 4—5.

The prohibition extends only against using entries in the diary as evidence against third persons. There is no objection to such entries being used against the Police-officer himself, e.g., in a case against him under S. 211 of the Penal Code. But in such a case where only portions of the diary were placed in evidence the Police-officer was held entitled to place any other portions which explained those which were admitted.[11] A Police-officer charged with an offence cannot, however, use as evidence in his favour any entries made by him in a special diary; this is not because of the prohibition contained in S. 172, but because a person cannot make evidence for himself so as to take advantage of it.[12]

It has been held that a police diary could be referred to by the prosecution, not to substantiate the offence against the accused, but to see whether a witness has turned hostile.[13]

S. 91 of the Evidence Act does not apply to entries in special diaries; and oral evidence is admissible to prove statements made to the police, by witnesses who heard them made.[14] Whether the record of a statement be proved and used under S. 162 or used under S. 172, Cl. (2), without being proved, it is necessary for the Court to be astute and avoid using it otherwise than as provided by law.[15]

5. Inspection by accused.—This section provides that neither the accused nor his agent is entitled to see the diary merely because it is referred to by the Court.[1] The police diary is no doubt a public record but it is specially protected from inspection by either the accused or his agent.[2] It is the Court and not the accused person or his agent that can use the special diary for the purpose of contradicting the Police-officer who made it.[3] The Court cannot delegate this power to the counsel for the defence.[4] The accused's right to see the police diary will arise only in the two cases mentioned in the section, viz., if the diary is used by the Police-officer to refresh his memory or by the Court to contradict the Police-officer.[5] If the diary is used by the Police-officer to refresh his memory, the provisions of S. 161 of the Evidence Act will apply and the adverse party must be shown the entry and he may cross-examine the witness on it.[6] But the defence is entitled to an inspection of only that portion of the diary from which the witness refreshed his memory and not the entire diary;[7] and it has been held that if the accused does not exercise his right as soon as the witness refreshes his memory he does not continue to retain it during the whole of the subsequent examination of the witness.[8]

Copies of the diary cannot, as a matter of course, be granted to the accused.[9] On the happening of one or other of the events entitling the accused to inspection the sole right conceded to him by the legislature is the limited right of inspection and not to have copies.[10]

It has been held that as the right of the accused to inspect the diary can arise only in the two cases mentioned in the section, the accused cannot be prejudiced if no diary is maintained; because where there is no diary, there can be no occasion for the Court or the Police-officer to use the diary.[11] This view, however, seems to lose sight of the advantage that the accused may often derive by an inspection of the diary by the Court, an advantage which will be lost if a diary is not maintained.

The protection afforded to police diaries by this section is a limited one and only prohibits a person from calling for the police diaries of the investigation which preceded the enquiry and trial of the case in which he is accused. In any other enquiry or trial, Civil or Criminal, the diaries should be liable to be inspected as well as called for by the party who desires their inspection.[12]

6. Use of the diary.—The diary cannot be used for anything other than to assist the presiding Judge in the inquiry or trial.[1] What the law lays down is that any Criminal Court may send for the police diary of a case under inquiry and may use such diary, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such enquiry or trial. One obvious means of using it is for the suggestion of questions to witnesses before the Court when the Court considers there is reasonable ground for so doing.[2] The diary might be used to suggest means for further elucidating points that need clearing up, but only for elucidating them by legal evidence.[3] It is the duty of the Judge to bring on record by evidence any material facts that may come to his knowledge and it is for that purpose he can and should use the diary.[4] S. 172, Notes 6—7.

The provisions of S. 172 empower the Court to use the diary not only for the purpose of enabling the Police-officer who wrote it to refresh his memory or for the purpose of contradicting him, but also for the purpose of tracing the investigation through its various stages. It may use the diary as containing indications of sources and lines of enquiry and as suggesting the names of persons whose evidence may be material for the purpose of doing justice.[5]

The object of sub-S. (2) is not to enable the Court to direct the Police-officer who is giving evidence to refresh his memory from the notes made by him in the course of his investigation or to question him as to contradictions.[6]

If used for the latter purpose, the provisions of Ss. 145 and 161 of the Evidence Act shall apply.[7]

The accused are not entitled to see the diaries of the police, but when the Police-officer in giving evidence does not remember whether he had entered his proceedings of a particular day in his diary, the propriety of the Judge's sending for the diary is obvious.[8]

The Judge could refer to the diary even after the verdict of the Jury or Assessors, because the verdict does not end the trial.[9]

The power given to the Court under S. 172 should be sparingly exercised.[10]

As to the power of the Court to refer to the statements of witnesses to the police recorded in the police diary when such statement has not been proved or the accused has not asked for copies, see S. 162, Note 15, ante.

of contradicting him. Persons other than Police-officers cannot use it for the purpose of refreshing their memory.[2]

The accused cannot insist on the Police-officer's referring to his diary to refresh his memory, such use of the diary being at the discretion of the witness and the Judge.[3] But it was held in proceedings under S. 110, that though it may be within the right of the Police-officers not to refer to a diary, the accused was nevertheless entitled to the benefit of the witness's refusal to disclose the source of their information.[4]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[5] that a Court cannot compel the Police-officer to refresh his memory. The High Courts of Allahabad[6] and Patna,[7] have, on the other hand, held that it can do so.

A Judge is however not bound to compel a witness to refresh his memory, it being wholly within the Court's discretion to do so or not.[8]

As to whether a Police-officer can refresh his memory by referring to the statements of witnesses examined under S. 161 and written in the diary, see Notes to S. 162, ante.

8. May send for the Police diaries.—The Court can only make an order for the production in the particular case of the police diary or diaries. It has no power to issue a general order that in every case before it police diaries shall be produced. The order for the production of the diaries must be made in and confined to each particular case.[1] Police diaries not being evidence in the case, a Court is not empowered to draw any presumption for or against the prisoner from the non-production thereof.[2]

Procedure of police in case of deficient evidence.

125. If it appears to the Officer-in-charge of the Police-station that there is no sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the transmission of an accused person to the Magistrate, such officer shall release the accused person on bail or on his own recognizance, to appear when required, and shall submit a report of the case for the orders of the Magistrate having jurisdiction. Such report shall be submitted through the superior officer of police mentioned in S. 117, who may, pending the orders of the Magistrate, give instructions as to the conduct of the investigation.

S. 173, Notes 1—5.

Changes by the amending Act of 1923—

(1) the words "if arrested" in clause (a) of sub-S. 1 were substituted for the word "person."

(2) Clause (b) of sub-S. (1) was newly added.

(3) Sub-S. (4) was newly added.

2. Scope and object of the section.—S. 157, ante, provides for a police report as to information received about an offence, but before it is investigated. This section provides for a final report after completion of the investigation and showing the results of such investigation.[1] Till the final report under this section is made the investigation must be deemed to be pending and an informant cannot be prosecuted under S. 211 of the Penal Code.[2]

The final report under this section is to be sent in the form prescribed by the Local Government. In the various provinces the Local Governments have prescribed the various forms in which the final report is to be sent. Where the accused is sent up for trial the form of the report in some provinces is called the charge sheet. The report sent when the accused is not sent up is called the "final report" or "referred charge sheet."[3]

3. "Every investigation under this chapter."—The words "every investigation under this chapter" will include investigation started on information under S. 154, as well as investigation into a non-cognizable case under orders of the Court under S. 155, sub-S. (2).[1]

Every such investigation should, on its completion be followed by a final report under this section. Where the police after investigation into a non-cognizable case under S. 155, sub-S. (2) filed a complaint instead of making a report under this section it was held that the procedure was irregular though not a material irregularity vitiating the trial.[2]

4. "As soon as it is completed."—It is incumbent upon the investigating officer to complete his investigation without unnecessary delay[1-a] and submit the report under this section as soon as the investigation is over. There is no justification whatever for an investigating officer to delay his final report under this section till the proceedings under S. 202, infra, before the Magistrate terminate.[1]

should send the final report to the Magistrate. If a superior Police-officer has been appointed under S. 158, infra, the report should be submitted to the Magistrate through the superior officer. (Sub-S. 2). Cl. (b) of sub-S. (1) now provides that the informant who started the investigation should also be informed of the result of the investigation. S 173, Notes 5—6.

The duty of the Police-officer is to "investigate" and find the real culprit and bring him to justice; he ought not to try to get a confession from the alleged offender. In Queen Empress v. Bahu Lal,[1] Straight, C. J., observed, "instead of working up to the confession, the police work down from it, with the result that we frequently find ourselves compelled to reverse convictions simply because, beyond the confession there is no tangible evidence of guilt."

The Police-officer should not adjudicate on the guilt or innocence of the alleged offenders and especially in cases of rioting it is not the duty of the Police-officer to decide as to which of the parties was in the wrong.[2]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[3] that the railway police can also submit a report to the Magistrate under this section.

See also Note 4 to S. 170.

6. Report, to whom to be sent.—The final report under this section should be sent to the Magistrate who is empowered to take cognisance of the offence on a police report as provided in S. 190, Cl. 1 (b) .[1] On receipt of such report the Magistrate should deal with it under the provisions of S. 204, infra. He cannot, however, direct a further investigation and call for a fresh report.[2] There is a difference of opinion as to whether he can direct the police to prefer a charge sheet against the accused. The High Court of Madras[3] holds that he cannot do so. The police must be allowed to form their own opinion of a case when submitting their report and a Magistrate cannot ask them to change their opinion merely because he does not agree with them. The High Court of Patna,[4] and the Chief Court of Lower Burmah,[5] have on the other hand held that the Magistrate can make such a direction. According to the Patna High Court, such a direction is equivalent to saying "I give you a warrant to arrest the accused send them up either in custody or on bail according to the nature of the offence."

The power to order further proceedings (if any) under this section can apply only to the offence to which the report relates. The Magistrate has no power under the section to order proceedings against the informant.[5-a] As to the power of a Magistrate who has accepted a report by the police that the case is false, to direct the police to charge sheet the accused subsequently, see the undermentioned case.[5-b]

When there is no police report against a particular person the Magistrate, unless he is empowered under S. 190, Cl. 1 (c) cannot issue a warrant against that person for being tried before him.[6]

7. What the report should contain.—A report under this section includes both a "charge sheet" and a "referred charge sheet", i.e., both a report charging a person with an offence, and a report stating the case to be false.[1]

As has been seen already in Note 1, supra, the report should be sent in the form prescribed by the Local Government. It should contain the names of the parties, the nature of the information received, the names of persons who appear to be acquainted with the facts of the case and whether the accused persons have been forwarded in custody or have been released on bail.[2] Where instead of giving the nature of the information and the facts constituting the offence, merely the sections of the Penal Code were mentioned it was held that the provisions of this section were not complied with.[3] It is not however, necessary to give the abstract of the evidence taken by the police during their investigation.[4]

It is not every communication from the police that will be a report under this section; the section contemplates a report after an investigation of a case.[5]

8. How the report can be used.—The report of the Police-officer is not per se legal evidence of the facts stated therein,[1] though it can be used to suggest means of further elucidating points which needs clearing up.[2] It is improper and illegal for a Magistrate to draw material for a conviction from the report of the investigating officer when he has not been examined as a witness.[3] Vide Ss. 162 and 172, supra, as to how the statements before the police can be used.

S. 173, Notes 8—10.

The police report can be used by the Magistrate "as credible information" under S. 5 of the Gambling Act (III of 1867) for issuing a warrant of arrest.[4] It can be used as the basis for issuing a search warrant.[5]

When the police sent a report to the Magistrate under this section that an information as to an alleged theft was groundless it was held that merely on this report and without a formal complaint the informant cannot be prosecuted under S. 182 of the Penal Code.[6]

8-A. Right of accused to copy of report.—Under the new sub-S. (4) an accused person is entitled, on application, to a copy of any report forwarded under this section, before the commencement of the inquiry or trial. This subsection renders the undermentioned cases[1] no longer good law.

9. Penalty for submitting an incorrect or false report.——A Police-officer who either negligently or improperly files an incorrect or false report can be proceeded against under S. 29 of the Police Act (V of 1861).[1] He is also liable to punishment under S. 218 of the Penal Code. But he cannot be prosecuted under S. 211 of the Penal Code for making a coloured or false report, since it could not be said that he "instituted any criminal proceedings" against any person.[2] See also the undermentioned cases.[3]

10. Review by Sessions Judge.—An order of the Magistrate directing a case reported to him by the Police under this section to be struck off, is not a judicial order dismissing a complaint and cannot be revised by the Sessions Judge under S. 437, infra.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

(1) Under S. 161 of the Code of 1861 the intimation and inquest report had to be sent to the nearest Magistrate. Under the Code of 1872 the intimation had to be sent to the Magistrate duly authorised and the inquest report to the Magistrate of the District or to the Magistrate of the Division of the District.

(2) Under the Code of 1861 it was the duty of the Head of the village to make the enquiry "and report under this section while under the 1872 Code" the head of the village "in the Presidencies of 161. It shall be the duty of the Officer-in-charge of a Police-station, on receiving notice or information of the unnatural or sudden death of any person, immediately to give intimation to the nearest Magistrate, and to proceed to the place where the body of such deceased person is, and there in the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants of the neighbourhood, to make enquiry, and report the apparent cause of death, describing any mark of violence which may be found on the body, and stating in what manner or by what weapon or instrument such mark appears to have been inflicted. The report shall be signed by such Police-officer and other persons or by so many of them as shall concur therein, and shall be forthwith forwarded to the Magistrate. When there may be any doubt regarding the cause of death, such Police-officer shall forward the body with a view to its being examined by the Civil Surgeon, if the state of the weather and distance will admit of its being so forwarded without risk of putrefaction on the road. In the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay, it shall be the duty of the head of the village in like manner to make the enquiry and report as aforesaid.

Police to make immediate enquiry and report on unnatural and sudden deaths.

Madras and Bombay'' may also in like manner make the investigation and report. S. 174, Notes 1—4.

Changes introduced in 1882—

(1) The words ''or some other Police-officer specially empowered by the Local Government in that behalf'' were added after the words ''in charge of a Police-station'' in Cl. (1).

(2) For the words ''sudden or unnatural death of a person'' in Cl. (1) the words ''that a person—

(a) has committed suicide;

(b) has been killed by another or by an animal or by machinery; or

(c) has died under circumstances raising a reasonable suspicion that some other person has committed an offence'' were substituted.

(3) Cl. 5 enumerating the class of Magistrates authorised to hold inquests was newly added.

Changes introduced in 1923—

The words ''or Magistrate of the first class'' were added after the words ''Sub-Divisional Magistrate'' in Cl. (5).

2. Some other officer specially empowered.—For notifications specially empowering various officers under this section, see the references below.[1]

Act VIII of 1867 of Bombay relating to Police Patels remains unaffected except where the Code contains a specific provision to the contrary. Under S. 11 of that Act a police patel in Bombay is to hold an inquest forthwith and report to the nearest Magistrate,[2] and send the corpse for medical examination especially where murder is suspected.[3]

A police constable in Bombay cannot hold the inquest as a police patel. He has to proceed under this section.[4]

3. ''Shall proceed to the place where the body of such deceased person is''.—This section is inapplicable where the dead body is not available, e.g., where it has been burnt or disposed of long ago. It is intended to be applied to cases in which an inquest is necessary.[1]

4. In the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants.—Under S. 175, infra, the Police-officer proceeding under this section is empowered to summon persons for the purpose of this investigation. For consequences of non-compliance with such summons, see S. 174, Penal Code. Failure to examine at the trial persons who have witnessed the inquest proceedings may be a ground for criticising the prosecution evidence in a case.[1]

5. "Draw up a report".—The report under this section should contain the statements of the persons examined by the police. There is nothing in the Code which prevents statements made at the inquest being recorded in full. On the other hand such statements will be of great use to test the value of the evidence in Court.[1] Cl. (1) directs only Police-officers to draw up and forward the report. A Magistrate holding an inquest under Cl. (5) is not bound to report to any one else. But in case he sends a report it cannot be treated as a finding in a judicial proceeding and is not open to revision by the High Court.[2]

An inquest report is not a statement made by any person within the meaning of S. 180 of the Penal Code and a refusal by a person examined at the inquest to sign it is not an offence.[3]

The village headman acting under Cl. (4) has only the powers of a Police-officer specified herein.[4]

6. Form of inquest reports.—See the references mentioned below.[1]

The law does not require a statement to be entered in the form as to who killed the deceased person.[2]

7. Inquest report—Admissibility of.—The report does not prove itself[1] and is not admissible in evidence.[2] As to grant of copies of statements made to the police in the course of investigation, see S. 162 and the undermentioned cases.[3]

8. When there is any doubt, etc.—Sub-Cl. (3).—It is only when there is a doubt as to the cause of death or where it is considered otherwise expedient to do so, that the body is to be forwarded for post-mortem examination. Failure to carry out the directions laid down under this section by a Police-officer knowing that he would thereby be saving some one from legal punishment is an offence under S. 217 or S. 218 of the Penal Code.[1]

9. "Forward the body".—The body should be forwarded to the nearest Civil Surgeon or other qualified medical man appointed in this behalf by the Local Government with a view to its being examined. It is essential in a trial for murder that proof should be adduced of the fact that the same body over which the inquest was held was forwarded and examined by the Medical Officer.[1]

S. 174, Notes 9—14.

10. Post-mortem examination.—The Medical Officer must note the time when he conducted the examination.[1] Considering the important nature of the evidence which is generally supplied by the results of such examination, the result of the observation external and internal should be fully recorded[2] in the form prescribed by the Local Government.[3] The report of the Medical Officer is not admissible in evidence except for the purpose of contradicting the officer who made it or to refresh his memory under the provisions of Ss. 159 to 161 of the Evidence Act.[4]

When the Medical Officer is not examined at the beginning of the enquiry a copy of the post-mortem certificate ought to be given to the accused.[5]

11. Confessions by the accused at the inquest.—Confessions made by an accused and recorded in the panchnamas in the presence of the Police-officers must be excluded as inadmissible.[1] See also S. 27 of the Evidence Act.

12. False statement by witness at inquest.—Statements made in the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV are not 'charges' as contemplated by S. 211 of the Penal Code. It would make criminal investigation very difficult if any person who gave voice to a suspicion were rendered liable to criminal prosecution.[1] The fact that a person accuses another falsely of murder in the course of an investigation under this section is not an offence under S. 194 of the Penal Code especially when he volunteers the information.[2]

But where a person makes contradictory statements one before a Police-officer under this section and the other before the Magistrate in the course of the enquiry, he will be guilty of an offence under S. 193 of the Penal Code.[3]

See also S. 161, ante, and the notes thereto.

13. Inquest by Magistrate—Sub-S. (5).—The investigation by a Magistrate under this section is distinct from an enquiry under S. 202.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

(a) The words "A Police-officer proceeding under S. 174" has been substituted for the words "An officer in charge of a Police-station" to bring the section into line with the previous section.

(b) The word "truly" was first introduced into the section in the Code of 1882.

2. Scope of the section.—Sections 160 and 161, ante, empower any Police-officer making an investigation under this chapter to require the attendance of persons acquainted with the facts of the case, and to examine them. The words "investigation under this chapter" in the said sections refer to all investigations into offences.[1] Section 174, ante, deals with the investigations not into any offence but in the nature of an inquest, i.e., into the apparent cause of death. This section enables an officer making such an investigation, to summon and examine persons for the purpose of the said investigation, i.e., for the purpose of finding out the cause of death. It also enables him to summon persons other than those acquainted with the facts of the case to act as a jury or panchayat in the said investigation and to sign the inquest report. Such an investigation ceases when the cause of death is ascertained, i.e., when it is ascertained whether the death is natural, suicidal, accidental or due to homicide; if the latter, then the investigation becomes an investigation under S. 161.[2]

3. "Every person bound to attend and to answer truly all questions." —A person examined in the course of an investigation into an offence, is not bound to answer truly the question put to him, see notes to S. 161, ante. In an examination under this section however the person examined is bound to answer truly the question put to him.[1] In order however that a person may be proceeded against for giving false answer under this section it is necessary that he should have been summoned by an order in writing to attend before the Police-officer. A person who comes forward without being so summoned and volunteers information is not bound to give true answers to questions.[2]

4. Record of investigation.—There is nothing in the Code which prevents the statements of witnesses examined at the inquest being recorded in full; verbatim reports of such statements may often be of great use to a Court in testing the value of the evidence given subsequently.[1]

The Magistrate holding such an inquiry shall record the evidence taken upon it in any of the manners hereinafter prescribed, according to the circumstances of the case.

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
OBJECT OF THE SECTION	2
NATURE OF PROCEEDING	3
WHETHER REPORT OR FINDING NECESSARY UNDER THE SECTION	4
CERTIFIED COPIES	5
WHETHER DISTRICT MAGISTRATE CAN STOP PROCEEDINGS UNDER S. 176	6

1. Legislative changes.—The provision that in cases where any person dies while in the custody of the police, the nearest Magistrate empowered to hold inquests shall hold an inquiry, and the provision embodied in sub-S. (2) were first introduced in the Code of 1882.

2. Object of the section.—The object of the section is that an enquiry into a suspicious death should not depend merely upon the opinion the Police may form but that there should be a further check by enabling a Magistrate to hold an independent enquiry.[1]

3. Nature of proceeding.—"Enquiry" as defined in S. 4 (k) "includes every enquiry other than a trial conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court."

"Judicial proceeding" as defined in S. 4 (m) "includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath."

The proceedings under this section are held by a Magistrate and evidence may be legally taken on oath. Therefore the proceedings under this section are both an "enquiry" and a "judicial proceeding."[1]

4. Whether report or finding necessary under the section.—The section empowers a Magistrate to hold an enquiry into the cause of death, but it does not mention that any finding is to be given on report made. A report or finding under the section is therefore not necessary and if there is one, it does not form part of the proceeding.[1]

5. Certified copies.—An accused is entitled to get copies of the inquest report and of the statements made by witnesses at the inquest. If they are not available the Court has power under S. 94 to call upon the police to produce them.[1]

6. Whether District Magistrate can stop proceedings under S. 176.—As already stated in Note 3 an inquiry under this section is a judicial proceeding. A District Magistrate has therefore, no power to end the inquiry or interfere with it, beyond calling for a report under S. 435 and reporting for the orders of High Court under S. 438.[1]

1. Scope of the section.—It is a general principle of law that all crime is local.[1] In other words the jurisdiction to try a person for an offence depends upon the crime having been committed within the area of such jurisdiction[2] and not upon either the place where the offender is found[3] or upon his nationality.[4] This principle is found enacted in S. 2 of the Penal Code which declares that every person (which will include foreigners as well as subjects of the State) shall be liable to punishment under the Code for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof of which he shall be guilty within the said territories. There are, however, some statutory exceptions to this rule. S. 3 of the Penal Code

S. 177, Note 1, provides that any person may be liable for any act committed by him beyond British India, if there is any law passed by the Governor-General in Council to that effect. S. 4 of the same Code provides that the Code will aplly to offences committed by—

(1) Native Indian Subjects beyond British India.

(2) British subjects within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India.

(3) Any servant of the Queen, whether a British subject or not, within the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India.

It follows from what has been said above that an act committed on land outside British territory by a foreigner not being a servant of the Queen, is not an offence triable by British Courts under their Criminal Codes.[5] Therefore suppose A, a foreigner standing in foreign territory shoots B who is in British territory. A's act is not an offence within the Penal Code, and British Courts have no jurisdiction to try A for such act even if A is subsequently found in British territory.[6] The reason is that where it is sought to punish a person who is not a British subject as an offender in respect of a certain act, the question is not merely "where was the act committed" but "was the person at the time, when the act was done within the British territory." For if he was not, the act is not an offence, the doer of it is not liable to be punished as an offender and he is not subject to the jurisdiction of Criminal Courts.[7] The High Court of Bombay, has, however, in the undermentioned case expressed the view that in such a case, A would be triable by the British Courts if he was subsequently found within jurisdiction.[8]

A question of jurisdiction should be determined by reference to the provisions of the Code.[9] It should be determined first and not left to be determined after the Court has made up its mind whether to acquit or convict.[10] If a charge is laid before a Magistrate of an offence alleged to have been committed within his district the Magistrate has jurisdiction to deal with it and it is not removed by reason of the evidence disclosing that the offence was really committed in another district. If the charge is not made good by the evidence it will be a ground for acquitting the accused but not for quashing the proceedings.[11] S. 177, Notes 1—2.

A question of jurisdiction should be determined by the Court before which the offence is placed for trial and should not be referred to some superior officer to decide.[12]

This section applies to the trial of offences[12-a] and is inapplicable for determining the jurisdiction of a Court competent to entertain an application under S. 488, a refusal to maintain being no offence.[13] But the section applies to all offences whether under the Penal Code or otherwise. Thus, the jurisdiction of a High Court to punish a person for contempt of Court (which is not an offence under the Penal Code) is not ousted by the fact that the accused has removed himself beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court.[14]

2. "Ordinarily".—This section embodies the ordinary or general rule of jurisdiction and the following sections (viz., Ss. 179-184), the exceptions.[1] The word "ordinarily" has been advisedly used,[2] and must be taken to mean "except in the cases provided hereinafter to the contrary".[3] The rule in this section should therefore be read subject to any special provisions of law which may modify it such as S. 197, Cl. (2).[4] S. 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code also enables the Local Government to depart from this rule.[5] For exceptions to the general rule under other Acts, see the following cases.[6]

Courts in India have jurisdiction over offences committed on the High seas by virtue of 12 and 13 Vict., C. 96, 23 and 24 Vict., C. 88 and the Merchant

Shipping Act, the procedure being ordinary procedure under the Code.[7]

S. 684 of the Merchant Shipping Act provides for jurisdiction in any place in which the offender may be.[8] The jurisdiction, however, conferred by these statutes does not extend over offences committed in non-British ships.[9]

3. Several offences: Venue.—When an accused is charged with several offences over one or some of which only the Court has jurisdiction it should try only such latter offence or offences.[1] If a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of that conspiracy in District B the Magistrate of A can try the conspiracy but cannot try the accused for acts committed outside his district.[2] The provisions of S. 239 are governed by S. 177 et seq relating to jurisdiction and there can be no joint trial unless the Magistrate has jurisdiction over all the offences charged.[3] Where two different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction the case should be tried by the Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try both the offences and not by a Magistrate having jurisdiction over only one of them for it would be highly inconvenient that the two offences should be tried by different officers.[4]

4. "Within the local limits . . ."—A Magistrate of a division whose powers have not been formerly limited to any particular portion of the division has jurisdiction over all offences committed in the division.[1] It is only the Magistrate within whose local limits an offence has been committed that has jurisdiction to try it. Thus an offence of escaping from custody must be tried by the Magistrate within whose local limits the escape was effected.[2] An offence of bigamy or of abetment thereof can be tried only in the place where the bigamy or abetment took place and in the place from where the woman was enticed away.[3] Where however, the offence charged is that of enticing away a married woman, it is the Court within whose limits the enticement took place that would have jurisdiction and not the Court within whose limits the woman was detained.[4]

The offence of holding out false pretences to labourers and of inducing them thereby to enter into a contract must be tried in the place where such inducement was made.[5] The offence of murder should be committed for trial to the Sessions Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence was committed.[6] The offence under S. 134 of the Companies Act (failure to file a balance sheet) may be tried by the Court within whose jurisdiction the office of the Registrar where the balance sheet should be filed is situate; even though the company itself be located outside its jurisdiction.[7] Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute an offence and indirect preparation made, which does not amount to an act but which amounts to the commencement of an offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment. Hence the place where only the preparation is made has no jurisdiction.[8] See also the undermentioned case.[8-a]

An offence committed within British India cannot be tried by a British Court out of British India.[9]

For jurisdiction in proceedings under S. 488, see S. 488 and the undernoted cases.[10] Such cases as explained in Note 1 do not strictly come within the scope of S. 177.

A Magistrate holding powers within certain local limits cannot exercise those powers while he is beyond such local limits.[11]

5. Cheating and Criminal Misappropriation.—The place where the deception was practised and not where the fraud was discovered, is the place where the trial of the offence of cheating should be held.[1] Similarly the offence of misappropriation or breach of trust is triable at the place where it is committed[2] and not where the complainant first acquired evidence that the offence was committed.[3]

As to where the offence of criminal misappropriation can be tried, see S. 181.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to try an offence under S. 486, Penal Code, if the accused be shown to be in possession of goods with a counterfeit trade mark for sale or any other purpose of trade or manufacture though the sale or other purpose for which the accused has the goods in his own possession be not intended to take place within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the complaint is lodged.[4]

6. Defamation, giving false information, etc.—The sending of a newspaper containing defamatory matter by post from one place to another is publication of such matter at the latter place, and the latter place will therefore have jurisdiction over the offence.[1] The offence may also be tried at the place of posting.[2] When a person presents a defamatory petition to a superior officer who in the ordinary course of official routine sends it to a subordinate officer for inquiry there is publication in the place where the latter officer is.[3]

When one person instigates another to the commission of an offence by means of a letter sent through post the offence of abetment is completed as soon as the contents of such letter becomes known to the addressee and such offence is triable at the place where the letter is received.[4] Similarly the receipt at M of a letter by which a person is deceived gives the Magistrate at M jurisdiction over the offence.[5] But the offence can be tried even in the place where the letter is posted. So where the accused were charged with trying to cheat the Currency Officer of Bombay by claiming payment of halves of certain currency notes and the declaration in support of the claim was made and posted in Calcutta, it was held that the case was triable in Calcutta.

The gist of the offence under S. 182, Penal Code, is the giving of information so as to cause the public servant to act on it; so the offence is complete only when it reaches the public servant. Hence it is the place of delivery of a letter containing such information and not the place of posting that gives jurisdiction over the offence.[7] On the other hand the gist of the offence of printing seditious matter being the creation of the written words, the printing of the same at a particular place confers jurisdiction on that place though publication has been elsewhere.[8] But where there is no evidence that the printing of papers with the object of deceiving was done in a particular district, the Courts of such district have no jurisdiction over the offence.[9]

7. Offences by Foreigners.—See Note 1, above. See also the undermentioned cases.[1]

8. Irregular arrest—Effect.—Irregularity of arrest does not affect the jurisdiction of a Court to try the offender.[1] Moreover, an accused who has submitted to the jurisdiction of a Court must be regarded as having waived any irregularity affecting the manner in which his appearance before the Magistrate has been enforced.[2]

S. 177, Notes 8—11.

9. Transfer of Territory to Native States.—Where after the filing of an appeal to a Sessions Judge against the conviction for an offence committed within British India, territory including the place where the offence had been committed was transferred to a Native State it was held that the transfer did not affect the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to hear the appeal, the offence having been committed in British India.[1] The same principle applies to cases of committal[2] and it makes no difference that the enquiry into the offence was started only after the transfer of territory.[3]

10. Military offenders.—Under Reg. XX of 1825, Military authorities can require a Magistrate to hand over to them any prisoner who may be apprehended and brought before him for an offence committed more than 120 miles from Calcutta, but proceedings before the Magistrate when taken at the request of and assented to by the Military authorities are not absolutely void.[1]

11. Effect of trial at wrong places.—Sections 177 to 185 deal with venue and S. 531, enacts that no proceedings in a wrong place shall be set aside unless it appears that such error has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.[1] The reason is that territorial jurisdiction is not regarded as synonymous with essential jurisdiction and trial in a wrong district is not a fatal defect.[2]

When an offence is being tried in a wrong place the want of jurisdiction may be cured by an order of the High Court under S. 526, transferring the case formally to such Court.[3] A contrary view, has, however, been taken in the undermentioned cases.[4]

Where a commitment is made in respect of an offence committed outside the province, the High Court has no jurisdiction to transfer the case to a Court having jurisdiction in that province.[5]

S. 177, Notes 11—12.

The plea of want of jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in the High Court. Neither the ignorance and consequent silence of parties nor their consent can vest a Magistrate with powers which the law does not give him.[6]

12. Committal by or to wrong Court.—It was held by the Allahabad High Court in I.L.R. 3 All. 258 that when a Magistrate inquired into and committed the accused for trial for an offence which had not been committed in his district, and the Court of Session for that District accepted such committal (though having no jurisdiction) and convicted the accused, it was held that the proceeding was illegal ab initio.[1]

The High Court of Bombay on the other hand held that where a committal was made by a wrong Magistrate to the wrong Sessions Court an order of committal being an order of a criminal Court the provisions of S. 531, applied and in the absence of any failure of justice the committal need not be quashed. It was further held that the irregularity in committing the case to the wrong Sessions Court could be got over by transferring the case to the right Court.[2] This principle was followed in two later cases of the same High Court, but instead of transferring the cases for trial to the proper Sessions Court, the High Court in the one case retained the same for trial by itself[3] and in the other case passed an order under S. 526 directing that the trial do proceed before the Court to which the case was committed.[4]

The principle laid down by the Bombay High Court was followed in a later Allahabad case[5] and in the Madras High Court[6] but in the latter Court a distinction has been drawn between a committal by the wrong Magistrate and committal to the wrong Sessions Court. Committal by the wrong Court was held at the most to be an irregularity but committal to the wrong Sessions Court was held to be an illegality which could not be cured by transferring the case to the proper Sessions Court inasmuch as a transfer from a Court having no jurisdiction could not render the proceedings legal.[7] The Oudh Court following the Madras ruling has recognised or applied this distinction in a case before it[8] and a committal was quashed by the Calcutta Court apparently on the same ground of illegality.[9]

But a committal erroneously made to the High Court may be validated under S. 526 because although such committal may be in contravention of S. 206, yet the High Court has criminal jurisdiction under the Letters Patent to try cases committed to it instead of to the local Sessions Judge.[10]

Changes after 1898—

The words ''or S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915'' were newly inserted in the proviso by S. 2, and schedule of the Amending Act, 1916, (Act XIII of 1916).

2. Scope of section.—This section empowers the Local Government to direct that a case or class of cases committed for trial in a particular district should be tried in a Sessions division to which such district does not belong. But the Local Government has no power under the section to direct that a case should be tried by a particular Court in such Sessions division.[1] It was held in the undermentioned case[2] that on an order for transfer being made by the Local Government under this section the Sessions Court in the new division has full jurisdiction to try the case notwithstanding that the offence was not committed within the local limits of its jurisdiction. One of the Judges composing the Bench who decided that case however, took a different view and held that such Sessions Court could not try the case unless the offence was committed within the local limits of its jurisdiction. In his view, this section does not create an exception to the general rule of jurisdiction enunciated in S. 177 that an offence should ordinarily be tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed; but applies only to cases where the same officer has jurisdiction over two (or more) Sessions divisions, in which case there would be nothing contrary to S. 177 in his trying it, while sitting in one division, cases committed for trial in another division under his jurisdiction.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

(1) The words "or of anything which has been omitted to be done" were added in the Code of 1872 after the words "any offence by reason of anything which has been done".

(2) Illustrations (a) to (c) were added in the Code of 1872.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) The words "or of anything which has been omitted to be done" which occurred after the words "any offence by reason of anything which has been done" in the Code of 1872 were omitted. At the same time, the provision was added in S. 4 to the effect that words which referred to acts done extended also to illegal omissions.

(2) The words "in any district in which" were substituted by the words "by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction".

Changes made in 1898—

Illustration (d) was added.

2. Scope of section.—This section prescribes the venue for the trial of cases in which a person is accused of an offence by reason of some act done by him and of some consequence that has ensued from such act. In such cases, the offence can be inquired into or tried by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the act was done or the consequence ensued. The section applies only to cases in which the offender is accused of the offence by reason of two things, viz., some act done by him and some consequence that has ensued from such act.[1] Where such is not the case and the consequence of the accused's act has no bearing at all on the offence charged, the section has no application and the place where the consequence has ensued is not a proper forum for the

As to when a person may be said to be accused of an offence by reason of some consequence that has ensued from his act, See Note 3, infra.

3. Nature of 'consequence' contemplated by section.—There are two views as to the interpretation of the word "consequence" in this section. The first view is that it refers only to a consequence which is an ingredient or part of the offence charged. Thus where A is charged with committing culpable homicide by wounding X at one place resulting in the latter's death at another place, it is the infliction of the wound and the consequent death that together constitute the offence of culpable homicide and the offence can be tried at the place where the wound was inflicted or the place where the death occurred. Where the consequence is not an ingredient of the offence charged it will not according to the first view be a consequence by reason of which a person is accused of an offence, within the meaning of the section. The second view is that it refers to any consequence, which is a normal though not a necessary, ingredient of the offence charged. The first view is held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Bombay,[2] Calcutta,[3] Lahore,[4] Madras,[5] Patna[6] and the offence, provided it is a normal consequence of the offence. Assuming that the consequence referred to in the section is one forming an ingredient of the offence, the question arises as to whether a given consequence is an ingredient of the offence charged in the particular case. The case-law bearing on this aspect of the subject may be summarised as follows:

Criminal breach of trust and criminal misappropriation.—Where A in X commits criminal breach of trust of moneys belonging to B in Y, the loss suffered by B in Y in consequence of A's act in X is not a part of the offence of criminal breach of trust committed by A and according to the first view referred to in Note 3 above, the Court in Y has no jurisdiction to try the offence.[1]

The fact that in such a case A was under an obligation to render accounts to B in Y[2] or to pay the misappropriated amount to B in Y[3] does not make the failure to render accounts or make the payment a consequence forming part of the offence.

Cheating.—Where A cheats B in X and in consequence of this C in Y suffers a loss, the question arises whether the loss to C forms an integral part of the offence of cheating. On this question there is a conflict of decisions, some holding that the loss is an integral part of the offence[4] and the others, the contrary view.[5]

Where A in X dishonestly deceives by means of correspondence B in Y and the latter is thereby induced to part with money in Y, the inducement and

NOTE.—The case cited in foot-note (14) of Note 3 above proceed on the view that though loss may not be a consequence which is an ingredient of the offence of cheating, the offence may be tried or inquired into at a place where the loss occurs, the reason given being that the consequence referred to in the section is not confined to one which is a constituent element of the offence charged.

Defamation.—Where a petition containing defamatory statements is presented to a public officer and it is forwarded to a subordinate officer at a different place for enquiry and report, the publication at the latter place is a consequence of the accused's act which completes his offence and he can be tried there.[7] Where a defamatory letter is posted by the accused at M to another person at T the publication at T is a consequence of the accused's act which is an ingredient of the offence and he can be proceeded against the accused at T.[8]

5. Criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation.—Under S. 177 every offence can be inquired into or tried by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. Under S. 181, sub-S. (2) the offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust can be inquired into or tried not only by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence was committed but also by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property was received or retained by the accused. The question has arisen whether the present section applies to the offences of criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust. The view has been expressed in some decisions that S. 181, sub-S. (2) being a specific provision with regard to these two offences it excludes the application of this section to them.[1] But this view has been dissented from on the ground that the provisions of this chapter (Chap. XV, Part A) are not mutually exclusive and that the mere fact that specific provision is made for certain offences in some sections does not necessarily preclude the application of other sections to such offences.[2] It is submitted that the latter view is more in consonance with the scheme of the Chapter. This, however, does not completely dispose of the question as to the applicability of the section to the offences of criminal breach of trust and criminal misappropriation. The reason is that the question further depends on whether in such cases a person is accused of the commission of an offence by reason of something that has been done and some consequence that has ensued. For a discussion of this aspect of the subject, see Notes 3 and 4, ante, and the undermentioned cases.[3]

It may be convenient to discuss here scope of S. 181, sub-S. (2) with reference to what may be called some of the consequences of criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust.

Under that sub-section, the offence may be inquired into or tried by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence was committed[3-a] or the property was received or retained by the accused. Thus, where the accused was entrusted with money at A and he failed to account for it as he was bound to do, he may be proceeded against at A as being the place where he received the money.[4]

Where the accused was bound to render accounts at P and he failed to do so or submitted false accounts there as a result of the misappropriation committed by him, the question has arisen as to whether P can be held to be a place where the offence was committed by him or where he received or retained the property within S. 181, sub-S. (2). On this question, it has been held, in some cases, following the English common law, that where there is no evidence as to the place of the actual commission of the offence it may be presumed to have been committed at the place where the accused was bound to render accounts touching the subject-matter of the offence.[5] In some cases, it has been held that even where the place of the actual misappropriation or conversion with dishonest intent is known, the offence can be regarded as having been committed at the place where the accused was bound to submit his accounts, the reason given being that there is at such a place a dishonest user or disposal of the property in violation of the contract which the accused has entered into touching the discharge of his trust.[6] (See S. 405, Penal Code.) This view, however, has been dissented from on the ground that there cannot be a user or disposal at a place, of property which has never been there and which has actually been made away with at a different place.[7] S. 179, Notes, 5—6.

Where the accused was bound to pay at a particular place the balance due on taking accounts, it was held that there was at such a place dishonest retention of the money within S. 181, sub-S. (2).[8] See also the undermentioned case where it was held that it being uncertain whether the offence was committed at A where the accounts were to be rendered or at some other place, the offence could under S. 182, infra be inquired into or tried at A.[9]

6. Offences committed outside British India.—The Code extends only to British India (S. 1). Hence, where an offence is committed beyond the limits of British India it cannot be inquired into or tried by a Court in British India except in cases falling under S. 188, infra. Where an offence is committed outside British India in any case not covered by S. 188 and produces consequences in British India, the question arises as to whether this section applies to the case. If the consequence in question is not one of the kind mentioned in the section, the section does not apply and the happening of the consequence in British India does not confer jurisdiction on any British Indian Court.

a consequence within the meaning of this section. A cannot be tried in British India.[1]

2. A, a subject of a Native State, assaults B in Q, a Native State and as a result of the assault one of the legs of B is immediately broken. B then undergoes treatment in a hospital in British India. B has to remain in the hospital for more than 20 days. The consequence of B's being confined to the hospital and being prevented from attending to his normal duties for more than 20 days is held not to be a consequence within the meaning of the section. A cannot be tried in British India.[2]

3. A, the subject of a Native State, enters into a criminal conspiracy in P, a Native State, to commit the offence of cheating in British India. The offence of cheating is committed in British India in pursuance of the conspiracy. It is held that the commission of the offence of cheating in British India is not a consequence within the meaning of this section. A cannot be tried in British India for the offence of criminal conspiracy.[3]

(See N. 3 as to the nature of consequence contemplated by section.)

Even if the consequence is of a kind mentioned in the section, this section will not apply if the act of the accused was committed beyond the limits of British India under circumstances not coming within S. 188. The reason is that as the Code extends only to British India, this section cannot apply to acts committed beyond the limits of British India except in cases provided for in S. 188.[4] Thus, in the illustrations given above even if it were held that the several consequences referred to therein are consequences within the meaning of this section, the offender cannot be proceeded against in British India. In this connection it may be observed that illustration (d) to the section should be taken subject to the restriction that the offender is one of the persons mentioned in S. 188 and the certificate of the Political Agent or the sanction of the Local Government mentioned in the proviso to S. 188 is obtained.

But if an act is committed outside British India under the circumstances mentioned in S. 188 it may, under that section, be dealt with as if it had been committed at any place in British India at which the doer of the act is found. If the act has produced results in British India which constitute a consequence within the meaning of this section, the offender may be tried either at the place in British India where he is found and where under S. 188 his act may be deemed to have been done or at the place where the consequence of his act has ensued.[5] Thus, in illustration (d) to the section, the offender may be tried at Poona where the consequence of his act has ensued or at any other place in British India where he may be found.

But, before a person can be proceeded against in British India under the provisions of this section read with S. 188, the certificate of the Political Agent or the sanction of the Local Government mentioned in the proviso to S. 188

Conspiracy. See Note 2, F.N. (1).

Place for trial where act is offence by reason of relation to other offence.

66. When an act is an offence by reason of its relation to any other act which is also an offence, a charge of the first mentioned offence may be inquired into and tried, either in the district in which it happened, or in the district in which the offence with which it was so connected happened.

Illustrations.

(a) A charge of abetment may be inquired into and tried, either in the district in which the abetment was committed, or in the district in which the offence abetted was committed.

(b) A charge of receiving or retaining stolen goods may be inquired into and tried, either in the district in which the goods were stolen, or in any district in which any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained.

(c) A charge of wrongfully concealing a person known to have been kidnapped may be inquired into and tried in the district in which the wrongful concealing or in the district in which the kidnapping took place.

(d) A, B, C and others combine together to abet the waging of war against the Queen. Any of the conspirators may be tried in any district in which acts were done by any one of the persons with whom he or they, conspired, in pursuance of the original concerted plan and with reference to the common object.

Abetment.

28. The abetment of an offence, wherever such abetment shall have taken place, may be enquired into or determined in any district or division of a district in which the offence abetted may be enquired into or determined by any Court which has jurisdiction to try such offence, as if the abetment had been committed at the same place at which the offence abetted was wholly or partly committed: or the abetment may be enquired into or determined in any district or division of a district within which the abettor has done anything for abetting the commission of such offence.

Receiving, etc., stolen property.

31. If any person be charged with any offence punishable under S. 411, S. 412, or S. 414 of the Indian Penal Code, under the head "Of the receiving of stolen property," such offence may be enquired into or determined in any district or division of a district in which such person shall have, or shall have had, such stolen property in his possession, or in any district or division of a district in which the offence by which such property came to be stolen property within the meaning of the said Code, may be enquired into or determined.

1. Legislative Changes.— S. 180, Notes 1—3.

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

There was no section in general terms in the Code of 1861 similar to this section. But there were specific provisions embodying the principles contained in illustrations (a) and (c) of this section. The corresponding section in the Code of 1872 was S. 66.

Changes made in 1882—

The words "or which would be an offence if the doer were capable of committing an offence" were inserted in the section.

2. Scope of section.—This section contemplates cases in which there are two offences in question which are related to each other in such a way that one of them depends for its character as an offence upon its relation to the other offence. The section provides that in such cases, the first mentioned offence can be tried or inquired into by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction either of the offences was committed.

Illustrations.

1. A abets at X the commission of an offence at Y and the offence abetted is committed at Y. The offence of abetment can be tried either at X or Y.[1] [Illus. (a)].
2. A commits theft at X and the stolen property is dishonestly received and retained by B at Y. B can be tried for the latter offence either at X or Y.[2] [Illus. (b).]
3. A kidnaps at X a minor from lawful guardianship. B wrongfully conceals at Y the kidnapped person knowing him to have been kidnapped. B can be tried at X or Y.[3] [Illus. (c).]

The section applies, not only to cases where both the acts in question are offences, but also to cases where an act is an offence by reason of its relation to another act which is not an offence but which would be an offence if the doer of it were capable of committing an offence.

Criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust.

The offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received by the accused person, or the offence was committed.

Stealing.

The offence of stealing anything may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such thing was stolen or was possessed by the thief or by any person who receives or retains the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen.

1. Applicability of the section.—The section applies as between Courts of different local areas whose jurisdictions have been limited under S. 12 of the Code and to which the Code applies. It has no application to an offence committed in a Native State and a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of such an offence except under S. 188, infra.[1]

2. "Where the person charged is"—Sub-S. (1).—The words "where the person charged is" do not mean that such person should be voluntarily present within jurisdiction. The section will apply if he is physically present within jurisdiction even though such presence is due to the fact that he has been brought under arrest.[1]

(CODE OF 1861—Ss. 32 and 33.)

Being a thug, etc.

32. Whenever any person is charged with being a thug, or with murder as a thug, or with dacoity with or without murder, or with having belonged to a gang of dacoits, or with having belonged to any wandering or other gang of thieves associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery and not being a gang of thugs or dacoits, the offence may be enquired into in any district in which the accused person is by any Magistrate competent to commit to a Court of Session, and the accused person may be committed to the Court of Session to which such Magistrate is subordinate.

Escape from lawful custody under sentence.

33. If any person shall escape from any custody in which he is lawfully detained in pursuance of a sentence of a Court of justice, or by virtue of a commutation of such sentence, or shall be charged with any offence punishable under S. 227 of the Indian Penal Code or under S. 12 of Act XXIV of 1855 (relating to Penal servitude), the offence may be enquired into or determined, either in the District or division of a District in which such person shall be apprehended and retaken, or in the District or a division of a District in which he was formerly tried, or in the case of an escape from custody, in the District in which he shall have escaped from custody.

4. Dacoity.—See Ss. 391 and 396 of the Penal Code.

5. "Belonging to a gang of dacoits".—See S. 400 of the Penal Code.

Under the Code of 1861 the offence of belonging to a gang of thieves punishable under S. 401 of the Penal Code was one of the offences specified in the corresponding section of that Code. Such an offence is not now within the present section.

6. Offence of escape from lawful custody.—See Ss. 224 and 225-B of the Penal Code.

S. 33 of the Code of 1861 provided that offences under S. 227 of the Penal Code may be enquired into and tried in the District in which the accused is retaken for breach of condition.[1] There is no such provision in the present Code. Under the Code of 1861 again a person escaping from custody can be tried only at the place where he escaped from custody.[2] Under this section he can be tried where he is.

As to what is "lawful custody", see the following cases.[3]

7. Sub-S. (2).—The offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust can be tried or inquired into at any place where the offence was committed[1-a] or the property was received or retained.

For the offence of criminal misappropriation, see Ss. 403, 404 and for the offence of criminal breach of trust Ss. 405 to 409 of the Penal Code and the following cases.[1] As to whether S. 179 can be applied to the offences of criminal misappropriation and breach of trust, see Note 5 to S. 179, ante.

8. Property which is the subject of the offence.—It is only the receipt of the property which is the subject of offence that determines the venue of trial. Thus where A was entrusted with a railway receipt for goods at Pegu with instructions to take delivery of the goods at Rangoon and sell the same on the complainant's account, but A sold the goods and misappropriated the sale proceeds, it was held, that the property which was the subject of offence was the sale proceeds and not the railway receipt and that the Pegu Court had no jurisdiction to try the offence.[1]

S. 181, Notes 9—11.

9. 'Received or retained'.—It is not necessary under this sub-section, that at the time the property is received or retained by the accused person he should have a dishonest intention to misappropriate it or to commit criminal breach of trust with reference thereto. It is sufficient if the property which is the subject of offence was received or retained by the accused at a particular place, even though it was received quite properly and innocently at that place but misappropriated elsewhere.

Thus, where a person hired a cycle for 6 hours at Poona but later on pledged the same at Yeola, it was held that Poona Court had jurisdiction to try the offence.[1]

10. Sub-S. (3)—Theft.—An offence of being in possession of stolen property can be tried in the place where the property was stolen or where it was dishonestly possessed.[1] See also Illus. (b) to S. 180.

The expression "Stolen property" is defined in S. 410 of the Penal Code. Before the year 1882 the definition did not expressly state that property stolen outside British India could come within the definition of stolen property and it was held in some cases that such property was not stolen property.[2] After the amendment of S. 410 of the Penal Code in 1882, this is no longer law and a person can be punished in British India for being in possession of stolen property, though the property was stolen outside British India.[3]

Where a theft is committed in one district in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into in a different district, the Court in the latter district can try only the offence of criminal conspiracy but not of theft even though such Court could have tried both offences jointly, if the theft had been committed within its jurisdiction.[4] Where property stolen in one District is found in the possession of another person in another district, the thief can be legally tried in the latter district as the latter's possession is the constructive possession of the thief.[5]

11. Sub-S. (4)—Kidnapping and abduction.—For the definition of kidnapping, see Ss. 360 and 361 of the Penal Code and the following cases[1-a] and for the definition of 'abduction', see S. 362 of the same Code.

S. 181, Notes 11—12.

The offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship defined in S. 361 of that Code is not a continuing offence and is completed as soon as the minor was removed from the keeping of the guardian.[1] So it was held, under the old Codes, that the offence of kidnapping should be tried only in the Court within whose jurisdiction the kidnapping took place and not at any place where the minor was subsequently conveyed.[2] The present section now expressly provides that such offences of kidnapping and abduction are triable either at the place where the offence took place or at the place where the minor was conveyed, concealed or detained. The words 'kidnapping or abduction' in the section do not include the offence of wrongfully concealing or keeping in confinement a kidnapped person, because the latter is a separate offence under S. 368 of the Penal Code.[3]

This sub-section refers only to cases of kidnapping and abduction but does not apply to offences under Ch. XX of the Penal Code. So the offence of enticing away a married woman, under S. 498 of the Penal Code, does not come within the operation of this section and can be tried only at the place where the offence was committed.[4]

Abduction is a continuing offence and can be tried not only at the place where the person was abducted but also at the places where the offence continues.[5]

12. Effect of a trial in a Court contrary to the provisions of the section.—Where a person is tried in a wrong Court, contrary to the provisions of the section, it is only an irregularity within the meaning of S. 531 and the conviction will not be set aside unless there has been a failure of justice.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

(1) The words "when an offence shall be committed on the boundary or boundaries of two or more districts, whether subject to the same Local Government or not, or of two or more divisions of a district," that occurred in S. 29 of the Code of 1861 were omitted and the words "when it is uncertain in which of several districts an offence was committed" were substituted in S. 67 of the Code of 1872.

(2) The words "or shall be begun in one district or division of a district and completed in another, whether such districts be subject to the same Local Government or not" which occurred in the Code of 1861 were omitted and the words "or where an offence is committed partly in one district and partly in another" were substituted in the Code of 1872.

(3) The words "or where the offence is a continuing one and continues to be committed in more districts than one or where it consists of several acts done in different districts" were newly added in the Code of 1872.

(4) Illustrations (a) to (f) were added.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) The word "districts" that occurred in S. 67 of the Code of 1872 was omitted and the words "local area" were substituted in the Code of 1882.

(2) The illustrations which were given under S. 67 of the Code of 1872 were omitted; the underlying principle of illustration (a) was re-enacted as S. 183; those of illustrations (c) to (f) reappeared as the first three clauses of S. 181; and illustration (b) was not re-enacted.

2. Scope and applicability of section.—The section is intended to provide for the difficulty that would arise where there is a conflict between different areas, in order to prevent an accused person getting off entirely because there may be some doubt as to what Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the case. Hence where an offence is committed only in one place and no question of any other local area giving rise to jurisdiction this section has no application.[1]

The first clause of the section applies to cases where it is uncertain in which of several local areas an offence was committed. This, however, does not mean that the section applies only to such cases.[2] Thus, in the case of a continuing offence though it is beyond doubt that the place where the initial offence was committed would be a proper place of trial under the law, the offence can be tried under this section either at such place or at any other place where it continues to be committed.[3]

Under illustration (a) to S. 67 of the Code of 1872 (which corresponded to the present section) an offence committed in the course of a journey or voyage was treated as falling within the purview of the section and it was provided that it could be tried or inquired into by any Court through whose jurisdiction the offender passed in the course of the journey or voyage.[4] The principle of this illustration is now incorporated in S. 183. Further, the principles embodied in Cls. 1 to 3 of S. 181 were treated by the illustrations to S. 67 of the Code of 1872 as falling within the scope of the section.

As the Code extends only to British India, the expression "local area" in this section refers only to areas within British India; the section has no application where one of the local areas in question is outside British India.[5] Thus, if it is doubtful whether an offence was committed within British India or outside British India, this section does not apply so as to give jurisdiction to a British Indian Court.[6] Similarly, where the offence is a continuing offence within the meaning of this section and the initial offence was committed outside British India the fact that the offence was continued in British India does not confer jurisdiction on a Court in British India to inquire into or try the offence.[7] But where an offence is initiated outside British India but completed in British India, it has been held that the offence can be tried or inquired into in British India.[8] It is submitted that this view can be supported on the following ground: Under S. 177 an offence can be tried at any place at which it was committed. In the case of offences partly committed within one jurisdiction and partly within another jurisdiction the place where the offence is completed is to be deemed as the place where the offence is committed for the purpose of S. 177 though under this section (S. 182) the offender can also be tried at the place where it was initiated. Hence, if an offence is initiated outside British India and completed in British India, it can be deemed as committed within British India within the meaning of S. 177 and can be tried there under that section.

In cases coming under this section, the Courts having jurisdiction over the several areas in question have concurrent jurisdiction.[9] When a question arises as to which of the Courts ought to try the case it can be decided by the High Court under S. 185.[10]

3. Uncertainty as to local area in which offence is committed.—Under this section, when it is uncertain in which of several local areas an offence was committed, it may be inquired into or tried by any Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas.

Illustrations.

A person is charged with the offence of criminal breach of trust. Though it is clear that he must have committed the embezzlement either at Calcutta Burdwan or Murshidabad, it is uncertain at which particular place he actually committed the offence. He may be tried at any of these places.[1]

In the above illustration, the uncertainty is as to the actual scene of offence. The section, however, not only applies to such cases but also to cases where there is no doubt as to the spot on which the occurrence took place but the uncertainty is as to the particular jurisdictional division (sessions division, district or sub-district) to which the scene of occurrence belongs. Thus it applies to cases where there is no doubt that the occurrence in question took place at a particular locality A, but it is uncertain whether A is in district B or C.[2]

Similarly, the section also applies to cases where the uncertainty is not as to the spot on which the offence took place or the jurisdictional division to which such spot belongs but as to the question at what place an offence is to be deemed in law to have been committed. Thus where there is a doubt as to whether an offence is committed at B where the accused's act is done or at Y where the consequence of his act ensues, the offence can be tried at either place.[3]

4. Offences committed partly in one local area and partly in another.—Where an offence is committed partly in one local area and partly in another, it can be inquired into or tried at either place.

For further instances bearing on this aspect of the subject, see the undermentioned cases.[4]

As has been seen in Note 1, the section does not apply to cases where the whole offence is committed within one jurisdiction.[5] As to cases where an offence is partly committed outside British India and partly in British India, see the discussion in Note 2, supra.

See also Note 6 and S. 179 and the notes thereunder.

5. Continuing offence.—The third clause of this section provides that where an offence is a continuing offence, it may be inquired into or tried in any local area in which it continues to be committed. Thus, abduction is a continuing offence and is committed not only when the abducted person is first taken away from any place but continues to be committed so long as the abducted person is being removed from one place to another.[1] Hence, the offence can be tried or inquired into by any Court having jurisdiction in any of the local areas through which the abducted person has been taken. Thus, kidnapping from lawful guardianship is not a continuing offence because the offence is complete as soon as the taking or enticing the minor out of the keeping of the lawful guardian is effected and the offence does not continue so long as the minor is kept out of the custody of the guardian.[3] Independently of this section, however, this offence of kidnapping can under sub-S. (4) of S. 181 be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped was kidnapped or was conveyed or concealed or detained. See Notes to S. 181. S. 182, Notes 5—6.

Illustration (f) to S. 67 of the Code of 1872 treated theft as a continuing offence which could be inquired into or tried by any Court within whose jurisdiction the stolen property was conveyed.[4] This illustration has been omitted in the later Codes and it has been held that theft is not a continuing offence and does not continue to be committed so long as the thief is in possession of the stolen goods.[5] But under S. 181, sub-S. (3) the offence of theft can be inquired into or tried by any Court within whose jurisdiction the offence was committed or the stolen property was possessed by the thief.

6. Offences consisting of several acts.—Under the fourth clause of this section, where an offence consists of several acts which are committed in different local areas, the offence can be tried or inquired into by any Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas. But in order that this clause may apply it is necessary that an act must form part of an offence and not merely a preparation for the commission of the offence. Where an act forms part of an offence and not merely a preparation for its commission, the offence can be tried at the place where such act is done as well as at the place where the other acts constituting the offence are done.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

The corresponding section in the Code of 1861 was S. 30. In the Code of 1872 there was no substantive section dealing specifically with offences committed in the course of a journey or voyage; but under S. 67 which corresponded to S. 182 of the present Code an illustration was given (Illus. A) which embodied the principle of the present section.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) A separate section was enacted embodying the principle of the said illustration.

(2) The words "An offence committed on a journey or voyage" which occurred in the prior Code were substituted by the words "An offence committed whilst the offender is in the course of performing a journey or voyage."

(3) The words "in any district through which . . ." which occurred in Illus. (a) to S. 67 of the previous Code were submitted by the words "by a Court through or into the local limits of whose jurisdiction."

2. Scope and applicability of section.—This is one of the sections that amplify the general rule of jurisdiction laid down in S. 177 that an offence should ordinarily be tried or inquired into by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. The section deals with offences committed in the course of a Journey or voyage. In such cases, besides the tribunals referred to in S. 177, the offence can be inquired into or tried under this section by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the parties or the subject-matter of the offence passed in the course of the journey or voyage.

When any offence shall be committed on any person, or on, or in respect of, any property in or upon any coach, cart, or other carriage or conveyance, or upon any beast of burden employed in any journey, or shall be committed on any person, or on, or in respect of, any property on board any vessel, employed on any voyage or journey upon any navigable river, canal, or inland navigation, such offence may be enquired into or determined in any District or division of a District, through any part whereof such coach, cart, carriage, conveyance, beast of burden, or vessel, shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which such offence shall have been committed, in the same manner as if the offence had been actually and wholly committed in such District or division of a District; and in all cases where the side, middle, or other part of any highway, or the side, bank, middle, or other part of any such river, canal, or navigation, shall constitute the boundary of any two Districts or divisions of a District, such offence may be enquired into or determined in either of such Districts or divisions of a Disrict, through or adjoining to or by the boundary of any part whereof such coach, cart, carriage, conveyance, beast of burden, or vessel, shall have passed in the course of the journey or voyage during which such offence shall have been committed, in the same manner as if it had actually and wholly been committed in such District or division of a District.

2. A, while performing a railway journey from Shikarpur to Jacobabad commits an offence at some place between Sultan Kot and Hamayun. A can be tried for the offence at Jacobabad though the Court there has no jurisdiction over the area in which the offence was committed.[2]

It is necessary however, that the parties or the subject-matter of the offence should have passed through the jurisdiction of the Court proposing to hold the inquiry or trial in the course of the same journey or voyage in which the offence was committed. Such journey or voyage must be continuous from one place to another, regard being had for the purpose of estimating the continuity, to all the ordinary incidents affecting the journeys or voyages of the particular kind which may be under consideration.[3]

Illustration.

The complainant and the accused were travelling by the same train from Bombay to Calcutta via Allahabad. They broke their journey at Allahabad for a day or two and then proceeded to Calcutta. The accused was alleged to have criminally intimidated the complainant while they were at Allahabad. The stoppage at Allahabad was not due to the nature of the journey itself because the journey might have been completed without any appreciable stoppage simply by continuing in the train in which they were passengers before they came to Allahabad. Held, that the offence could not be tried or inquired into at Calcutta.[4]

But if the halt in the course of a journey or voyage is incidental to it, the halt does not affect the continuity of the journey or voyage for the purpose of this section. Hence, an offence committed during such a halt can be inquired into or tried at the place of destination.[5]

The journey or voyage referred to in the section is the journey or voyage which the offender was performing at the time of committing the offence. Hence, a Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into or try an offence under this section unless the parties or the subject-matter of the offence passed within its jurisdiction in the course of the journey or voyage which the offender was making at the time of committing the offence.[6]

As the Code extends only to British India, this section applies only to offences committed in British India. Hence, an offence committed outside

Differences between the Code of 1882 and the earlier Codes—

(1) The words "district in which any offence" which occurred in the earlier Codes were substituted by the words "the Court by which any offence".

(2) The words as to the inquiry or trial mentioned in the section being one under the preceding provision of the chapter were added.

(3) The words "within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction" were substituted for the words "within whose jurisdiction".

(4) The words "the offender actually is" were substituted for the words "the offender is apprehended".

(5) Paragraph 2 was added making provision as to what Court should be regarded as the High Court for the purposes of the section in British Burma.

Changes subsequent to 1898—

Sub-S. (2) corresponding to the second paragraph of the section in the Code of 1882 was repealed by the Lower Burma Courts Act, 1900.

34. Whenever any doubt shall arise as to the district in which any offence should be enquired into or determined, it shall be lawful for the Sudder Court within whose jurisdiction the offender is apprehended, to decide in which District the offence shall be determined.

S. 185, Notes 1—2.

Changes made in 1923—

(1) The word "question" was substituted for the word "doubt".

(2) The words as to the inquiry or trial mentioned in the section being one under the preceding provisions of the chapter were omitted.

(3) Prior to the amendment the section purported to provide for cases where the question was as to "the Court by which an offence would be tried or inquired into". Under the amendments, the section purports to lay down the procedure where the question is as to "which of two or more Courts ought to inquire into or try an offence".

(4) Prior to the amendments, the power to decide the question mentioned in the section was conferred on the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually was. Under the amendments the power to decide the question is given to the High Court to which both the Courts as to which the question arises are subordinate.

(5) Prior to the amendments it was provided that the High Court "may" decide the question; under the amendments it is provided that the question "shall" be decided by the High Court (where both the Courts in question are subordinate to the same High Court).

(6) Prior to the amendments, the section did not contain any express provision for cases in which the question as to forum was raised with reference to Courts subordinate to different High Courts. Sub-S. (2) which was added by the amendments specially provides for such cases.

2. Scope and applicability of section.—This section provides for the solution of the difficulties that might arise with regard to the relative jurisdiction of different Courts to dispose of a case and the expediency on grounds of convenience and other considerations of having a case tried or inquired into by one Court or another. Thus, where two Courts have concurrent jurisdiction to try a case, the mere fact that one of them has taken cognizance of the offence does not preclude the other Court from taking cognizance of the same offence.[1] In such cases the High Court might interfere under the provisions of this section to declare in which of the two Courts the proceedings should be continued.

The section has been extensively amended in 1923. The section divides the cases it is intended to provide for into two classes. Sub-S. (1) refers to cases where the Courts in question are subordinate to the same High Court. Sub-S. (2) refers to cases where such Courts are not subordinate to the same High Court.

The section applies only to cases of offences. Hence it does not apply to proceedings under Chapter XII.[2]

3. Sub-S. 1.—Courts subordinate to the same High Court—Question as to which Court should dispose of case.—This sub-section provides that when a question arises as to which of two or more Courts subordinate to the same High Court ought to try or inquire into an offence the question must be decided by such High Court. Previous to the amendments of 1923, there was a conflict of decisions as to the nature of questions that would come within the scope of the section. On the one hand it was held by the Allahabad High Court[1] that the section applied only to cases where the doubt was as to the jurisdiction of different Courts and where there was no question of jurisdiction involved but the question raised was purely one of convenience and expediency the section did not apply. On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta[2] and Madras[3] and the Chief Court of Punjab[4] that the section applied notwithstanding there was no doubt raised as to the jurisdiction of different Courts but only as to the greater convenience and desirability of inquiring into or trying a case in one Court or another. The legislature has adopted the latter view by the amendments it has made in sub-S. (1). Where a question is raised as to the jurisdiction of a Court the section will apply though the question is based on a ground of law.[5]

In a case before the amendments of 1923, it was held that a doubt not as to the place of inquiry or trial under the preceding provisions of the chapter, but as to the competence of the Magistrate to commit the accused as an European British subject for trial did not fall within the purview of the section.[6] The words as to the inquiry or trial being one under the preceding provisions of this chapter have now been omitted in the section and hence, it is submitted that the section would apply whatever be the ground on which it is contended that one Court and not another should deal with a case.

4. Sub-S. 2.—Case where same offence is taken cognizance of by two different Courts subordinate to different High Courts.—Previous to the amendments of 1923, there was a conflict of decisions as to the power of the High Court under this section to direct that a case instituted in a Court not subordinate to itself should be tried by a different Court.[1] Sub-S. (2) now provides a new procedure to be followed in such cases and the old cases are only of academic importance now. Under this sub-section though the jurisdiction of the High Court is not totally ousted merely because a case has been instituted in a Court subordinate to a different High Court it is clear that one High Court has no power to transfer a case pending in a Court subordinate to another High Court.

This sub-section only applies to cases where two or more Courts have taken cognizance of an offence. Where only one Court has taken cognizance of an offence the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere under this sub-section.[2] Hence the view taken in some decisions prior to the amendments of 1923 that where a case is instituted in a Court subordinate to a High Court such High Court could decide that the offence should be dealt with by another Court subordinate to a different High Court[3] (though such Court has not taken any proceedings against the accused) is no longer good law.

The provisions of this sub-section may be compared with those of S. 527. The scope of the two sections entirely differ. Under S. 527 the Governor-General-in-Council has the power of transferring cases pending in one High Court or in a Court subordinate to one High Court to another High Court or to a Court subordinate to another High Court. Under this sub-section the High Court has no power to transfer any case from a Court subordinate to one High Court to a Court subordinate to a different High Court. The power of the High Court is only to direct that proceedings should continue in a Court subordinate to itself, though, on such an order being made proceedings in other Courts are to stop. Thus the High Court has only indirectly the power to stop proceedings pending in a Court in a different province and not to transfer such proceedings. Moreover, the power of the High Court under this sub-section arises only where two or more Courts subordinate to different High Courts have taken cognizance of the same offence while the power of the Governor-General in Council under S. 527 arises as soon as proceedings have been instituted in any (one) Court. Again, the order under S. 527 is an executive order while that under this sub-section is a judicial order.

of 1872 extended the power to a Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) The Presidency Magistrate was included among the Magistrates who might act under this section.

(2) The prior Codes referred in terms to an offence committed outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, for which, if committed within his jurisdiction, he might issue process. The Code of 1882 purported to provide for offences committed outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, which could not be tried or inquired into by any Court within such limits, but which could be tried or inquired into elsewhere in British India.

(3) The Code of 1882 conferred on the Magistrate the power to inquire into the offence as if it had been committed within his jurisdiction.

(4) The words "when there are more Magistrates than one having such jurisdiction" in the second paragraph of the section were newly added.

2. Scope and applicability of section.—In order that this section may apply the following conditions must be satisfied:—

(1) the Magistrate must have reason to believe that an offence has been committed outside the local limits of his jurisdiction, whether within or without British India;[1]

(2) the offender must be within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction;

(3) the offence must be one which could not be tried within such local limits under the provisions of Ss. 177 to 184;

(4) the offence must be one triable in British India.

Where an offence is triable within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, though committed outside such limits the third condition is not satisfied and this section does not apply.[2]

The powers conferred by this section are conferred only on certain specified Magistrates and not on all Magistrates.[3]

3. Issue of warrant under the section from place beyond jurisdiction.—It has been held that it is not necessary that a Magistrate issuing a warrant under this section should be present within the local limits of his jurisdiction at the time of issuing it. It is enough that at such time the offender is found within such limits though the Magistrate himself is outside such limits.[1]

4. Powers of High Court.—When the facts of a case fall within this section not only can the Magistrate follow the procedure laid down therein, but also the High Court can, under Cl. 29 of the Letters Patent (Madras) direct a Magistrate to hold a preliminary investigation and commit the case to the sessions if a prima facie case is made out. But S. 186 being a special provision and Cl. 29 of the Letters Patent being a general provision, the High Court will not make such an order unless the case is of an extremely exceptional character; and ordinarily, the Magistrate must be allowed to follow the procedure laid down in this section.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

The Law prior to the Code of 1882:—

The Codes of 1861 and 1872 did not contain any provision corresponding to this section. But S. 9 of the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, XXI of 1879 contained such a provision.[1-a] This was transplanted as S. 188 of the Code of 1882 when that Code was enacted. As to the law prior to Act XXI of 1879, see the undermentioned cases.[1]

Changes made in 1898:—

(1) With regard to offences committed in Native States the Code of 1882 applied only to European British subjects. The present section applies to any British subject.

(2) The clause as to offences by servants of the Queen committed in Native States is new. This supersedes the undermentioned decision.[2]

(3) In the first proviso, the provision for obtaining the sanction of the Local Government was added.

Amendments of 1923:—

The words "notwithstanding anything in any of the preceding sections of this chapter" in the first proviso were newly added.

2. Scope and applicability of section.—It has been seen in the Notes under S. 177 that all crime is local and that the jurisdiction to try an offence arises at the place where the offence is committed and does not depend on the nationality of the offender or the place where he is found. This principle is given effect to in that section which provides that ordinarily, all offences should be tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. It also finds embodiment in S. 2 of the Penal Code, which provides that every person violating the provisions of the Code within the said territories (British India) shall be liable to punishment under the Code. Similarly, S. 1 of the Code provides that the Code extends to the whole of British India. It has also been seen in the Notes under Ss. 179 to 183 that those sections do not apply to offences committed outside British India so as to make such offences triable in British India. It will thus be clear that the criminal jurisdiction of British Indian Courts is primarily territorial and is confined to offences committed within the borders of British India. But there are certain exceptions to this rule. This section embodies some of these exceptions. It provides for the extra-territorial jurisdiction of British Indian Courts in certain cases. It has its counterpart, so far as the substantive law is concerned, in S. 4 of the Penal Code. Under these two sections British Indian Courts are empowered to deal with offences alleged to be committed outside British India in certain cases. These cases are as follows:—

(1) offences committed by Native Indian subjects in any place beyond the limits of British India;

(2) offences committed by any other British subject in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India;

(3) offences committed by a servant of the King, whether a British subject or not, in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India.

In such cases, the section provides that the offender can be dealt with in respect of the offence as if it was committed at any place in British India at which he may be found. But the section imposes as a condition for the trial of an offender under it that the certificate of the Political Agent for the area in which the offence was committed, or, where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government, should be obtained. The object of such a provision is to prevent the accused being tried over again for the same offence in two different places.[1-a] (Cf. Proviso 2).

The section applies only to offences committed outside British India. Where an offence is committed within British India, the mere fact that it is connected with other criminal acts done outside British India does not make the section applicable.[1] Similarly, offences committed outside British India by persons or in places not covered by the section cannot be tried in British India under the section.[2] Thus, a person who is neither a British subject nor a servant of the King cannot be tried in British India for an offence committed by him in a Native State. Where an objection is raised as to the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the offence was committed outside British India, the question must be investigated by the Court and a decision arrived at on the facts.[3] As to submission to jurisdiction, see the undermentioned case.[4]

Where an offence is committed within British India it can, under S. 177 and the general principle already stated, be tried in British India notwithstanding that the offender is a foreigner.[5] Where a foreigner in a foreign territory initiates an offence there which is completed in British India, there is a conflict of decisions as to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts to try the foreigner. (See S. 177, Note 1.)

Though the section empowers British Indian Courts to try offences committed outside British India in the cases specified therein, it does not affect the liability of the offender in such cases to be dealt with in the state wherein the offence was committed.[6] It has also been held that a judgment of acquittal or conviction passed by a foreign Court in such a case will be a bar to proceedings being started against the alleged offender under this section in British India.[7]

S. 188, Notes. 2—5.

Extradition.—Where a person commits an offence outside the British India and is later on found in British India there are two courses open. He can be tried in British India under this section if the case falls within its purview. Or, he can be arrested and sent to the state where he committed the offence to take his trial there. This is called extradition. As to the rules and principles governing the subject of extradition, see inter alia, the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903), and the following cases.[8]

3. British India.—See Notes under S. 1 and the undermentioned cases.[1]

4. Transfer of territory to another state after commission of offence —Effect.—See S. 177, Note 9.

5. Liability of Native Indian subject.—The first paragraph of this section makes Native Indian subjects of His Majesty committing an offence in any part of the world liable to be dealt with in British India.[1] The provision is based on the principle that the judicial power of every independent state extends to the punishment of all offences against the municipal laws of the state by whomsoever committed within the territory and also to the punishment of all such offences by its subjects wheresoever committed.[2]

The expression "Native Indian subject" is not defined anywhere. The points to be considered in deciding if a person is a Native Indian subject are his parentage, the place and time of his birth and his habits as to residence within and without the territory.[3] The mere fact that a person owns property in British India is not sufficient to make a person a native Indian subject.[4] Nor does mere occasional residence in British India confer on a person the status of a Native Indian subject, the reason being that the expression Native Indian subject must be held to refer to a de jure and not merely a de facto Native Indian subject of His Majesty.[5] It has been held that the son of an alien, born in British India is a Native Indian subject of His Majesty.[6] See also the undermentioned cases.[7]

S. 188, Notes 5—7.

6. "At which he may be found."—The expression is not restricted to cases where a person can be said to be "discovered" in British India. It includes cases where the accused is brought by the police to a place in British India from a place outside.[1] Similarly, the illegality of the arrest under which the accused is brought into India from a foreign place does not affect the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts under this section.[2]

7. Certificate of Political Agent or sanction of Local Government (First proviso).—The first proviso to the section imposes certain restrictions on the exercise of the power conferred by the first three paragraphs of the section on British Indian Courts to inquire into or try offences committed outside the limits of British India. The restriction is to the effect that no such offence should be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent for the territory wherein the offence was committed certifies that in his opinion the offence should be tried in British India, or where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government is obtained. The certificate or the sanction prescribed by this proviso is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed with the matter and an inquiry or trial held without such sanction or certificate is void.[1] The contrary view,[2] viz., that the want of such sanction or certificate is only an irregularity covered by S. 537 is, it is submitted, not correct.

The requirement of the certificate or sanction applies to preliminary inquiries with a view to commitment to the sessions[3] as well as to regular trials.

S. 188, Note 7.

A commitment made in the absence of the certificate or sanction is illegal and must be quashed.[4] The obtaining of sanction ex posi facto after the commitment has been made does not validate the commitment.[5] Suppose the certificate is obtained pending an inquiry. Is such a certificate sufficient? Yes, according to the High Court of Bombay,[6] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind.[7] No, according to the High Court of Allahabad.[7-a]

The introduction of the words "notwithstanding anything contained in any of the preceding sections of the chapter" into the proviso by the amendments of 1923 makes it clear that the fact that an offence committed outside British India falls also within the purview of any of the previous sections of the Chapter does not dispense with the certificate or sanction prescribed by this proviso.[7-b] Thus, A is wounded by B, a Native Indian subject in the Native State of Baroda and dies of his wounds in Poona. In such a case, under S. 179, the offence of causing A's death may be inquired into and tried in Poona, (see Illus. (d) to S. 179]. Similarly, where A, a Native Indian subject abets, in a Native State the commission of an offence in P in British India, he can, by virtue of S. 180 be tried in P in British India. But the certificate of the Political Agent for the Native State in question will be necessary for the trial in each of these cases. For other instances, see the undermentioned cases.[8]

(1910) 11 Cri. L. Jour. 306 (307) (Mad.), Sessions Judge, Tanjore v. Sundara Singh (Charge under I. P. Code, S. 411 (Dishonestly receiving or retaining stolen property)—Offence alleged to be committed in Native State by Native Indian subject—Theft by which property was removed alleged to have been committed

The applicability of the proviso is not restricted to offences committed in Native States. Thus, where a Native Indian Subject commits an offence in Spain he cannot be tried in British India without the sanction of the Local Government.[9] But the proviso does not apply to offences committed on the High seas, the reason being that the proviso applies only to offences committed in any territory.[10]

A formal or express certificate or sanction is necessary under the proviso. Thus, the mere fact that the Magistrate who initiated the proceedings is himself the Political Agent for the area in which the offence was committed does not dispense with the necessity for the certificate.[11]

As seen already, the requirement as to the certificate or sanction is a peremptory one. The mere fact that an agreement has been entered into between the executive authorities of the British Indian Government and the State wherein the offence was committed to the effect that Native Indian Subjects committing offences in such State should be triable in British India does not dispense with the certificate or sanction.[12] Similarly, the mere fact that a charge is framed against the accused in the alternative so as to include an offence committed inside British India does not dispense with the certificate with reference to the offence alleged to have been committed outside British India. Thus, where the charge is in the alternative under S. 379, I. P. C. (theft) (Committed in British India) or under S. 411, I. P. C. (receiving stolen property) committed outside British India the latter charge cannot be tried in British India without the certificate referred to in the proviso.[13]

But, there is no particular form in which the certificate or the sanction must be issued. In each case it must be found as a fact that the certificate or the sanction was issued by the proper authority.[14] It is not necessary that the certificate should be signed by the Political Agent himself. Signature by some person who is authorised to communicate the Political Agent's opinion is enough.[14-a] A mere letter from the Secretary of the Political Agent that in his (the Secretary's) opinion the case was a fit one to be tried in British India cannot justify a Magistrate in presuming that the Political Agent himself had certified that the case should be tried in British India.[15] But where the Political Agent has in fact passed an order that the case should be tried in British India the mere fact that it was not communicated to the Magistrate does not vitiate his proceedings.[16]

A certificate issued under this proviso is not bad merely because it does not specify the section under which the accused must be tried. It is enough if it sanctions the prosecution of the accused for the offence alleged.[17] Similarly, a certificate issued under the section will authorise the trial of the accused for any offence disclosed in the proceedings; the trying Magistrate is not bound to confine himself to the section specified in the certificate.[18]

A certificate of the Political Agent issued under this proviso cannot be revoked by him.[19] The Political Agent can issue a certificate under this proviso even after the issue of a warrant for the arrest of the accused under the Extradition Law.[20] Where a commitment is quashed or an accused is discharged for want of a certificate under the proviso, fresh proceedings can be started after obtaining such certificate.[21] Such proceedings are not a revival or continuation of the previous proceedings against the accused.[22]

Whenever any such offence as is referred to in section 188 is being inquired into or tried, the Local Government may, if it thinks fit, direct that copies of depositions made or exhibits produced before the Political Agent or a judicial officer in or for the territory in which such offence is alleged to have been committed, shall be received as evidence by the Court holding such inquiry or trial in any case in which such Court might issue a commission for taking evidence as to the matters to which such depositions or exhibits relate.

Power to direct copies of depositions and exhibits to be received in evidence.

"Political Agent" defined.

190. In sections 188 and 189 the expression "Political Agent" means and includes—

(a) the principal officer representing the British Indian Government in any territory beyond the limits of British India;

B.—Conditions requisite for Institution of Proceedings.

Cognizance of offences by Magistrates.

191. Except as hereinafter provided, any Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate, and any other Magistrate specially empowered in this behalf, may take cognizance of any offence—

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) upon a police report of such facts;

(c) upon information received from any person other than a Police-officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion, that such offence has been committed.

The Local Government, or the District Magistrate subject to the general or special orders of the Local Government, may empower any Magistrate to take cognizance under clause (a) or clause (b) of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

The Local Government may empower any Magistrate of the first or second class to take cognizance under clause (c) of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 141, Para. 1 and S. 142, Para. 1.)

Who may entertain Complaints.

141. The Magistrate of the District, any Magistrate of a Division of a District, or any Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf, in any case which he is competent to try or to commit for trial, may entertain a complaint of an offence, whether preferred directly by the complainant, or on report of a Police-officer, and may issue process, in the manner hereinafter prescribed, to compel the appearance of persons accused of such offences.

S. 190, Notes 1—3.

Cl. (b) in sub-S. (1) was amended in 1923 by the substitution of the words "report in writing of such facts made by a Police-officer" for the words "police report of such facts" that occurred before. As to the effect of the change, see Note 20 below.

2. Scope of the section.—This section provides that the Magistrates specified therein may take cognizance of an offence, upon receiving a complaint, or upon a report in writing made by a Police-officer, or on information received from a person other than a Police-officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion. It is, however, not exhaustive of the Courts that can take cognizance, or of the materials on which cognizance can be taken.[1] Thus S. 193 provides that a Court of Session can take cognizance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction on a commitment made to it. Under S. 480 any Court, whether civil, criminal or revenue, may take cognizance of certain offences when they are committed in its view or presence. Again, when, after the initiation of judicial proceedings with reference to one offence or against one person, another offence appears to be involved in the criminal transaction in question or another person appears to be implicated therein and the Court then seised of the case takes action by starting proceedings in respect of such offence or against such person, it really takes cognizance of such offence, by virtue of its being seised of the case relating to the criminal transaction in question and not under this section (see Notes 6, 8, and 9).

Ordinarily, however, where a Court has not yet become seised of a case relating to a criminal transaction, judicial proceedings with reference to an offence involved therein can only be initiated under this section.[2]

As to the meaning of the expression "taking cognizance of an offence", see Note 3 below.

3. "Taking cognizance of an offence"—What is.—The expression "taking cognizance of an offence" has not been defined in the Code. In its broad and literal sense it would mean "taking notice of an offence" and would include—

(a) the taking notice of an offence with the intention of initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of that offence, or

(b) the taking notice of an offence with a view to take steps to see whether there is any basis for initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of the offence, or

(c) the taking notice of an offence for other purposes.

[See also (1902) 6 Cal. W. N. 202 (208), In the matter of Akbar Momin.]

S. 190, Notes 3—4.

The expression has, however, been used in the Code, not in the broad sense stated above, but only in the limited sense covered by the first clause mentioned above. Thus the taking notice of an offence on a Police report under S. 157 and acting on such report under S. 159, falls under the second clause referred to above but is not "taking cognizance of an offence" for the purposes of the Code. Similarly, the taking notice under S. 480 of the Code of an offence committed in the view or presence of the Court with a view to detain the offender in custody falls under the third clause referred to above, but is not "taking cognizance of an offence" as is clear from the fact that the section provides that the Court "at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day, may, if it thinks fit, take cognizance of the offence". In Emperor v. Sourindra Mohun[1] it was observed that "taking cognizance occurs as soon as a Magistrate as such applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence". In view of the discussion above, this broad definition, is, it is submitted, not correct.[2]

4. How to determine whether and when cognizance has been taken.— No formal action or action of any kind whatever is necessary in order to take cognizance.[1] Cognizance is taken of an offence as soon as a Court, competent for the purpose, applies its mind to the offence with the intention of initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of the offence. The date on which the judicial proceedings are actually commenced against the offender need not necessarily be the date on which the cognizance is taken.[2] Thus a Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence, may without anything further transfer the case under S. 192 to another Magistrate[3] and in such cases the judicial proceedings against the accused are actually commenced before the transferee Magistrate some time later. The examination of the complainant, in cases where cognizance is taken on a complaint, is not necessary to complete the taking of cognizance.[4]

The taking of cognizance being, as has been seen before, a purely mental act, the question whether cognizance has been taken in any particular case, must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Thus a Magistrate receiving a complaint can, under S. 202, order preliminary inquiry only after the examination of the complainant on oath, which again can be held only if the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence. (See S. 200). Where in such a case a Magistrate ordered a preliminary inquiry without examining the complainant, it was held that he did not take cognizance of the offence.[5] As a general rule where a Magistrate does any act which he is authorised to do only after taking cognizance, he will be deemed to have taken such cognizance provided he is competent to take such cognizance. S. 190, Note 4.

Illustrations.

(1) A, a Magistrate who is competent to take cognizance of an offence, transfers a case under S. 192 to B. A must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the offence, as a transfer under S. 192 can be made by a Magistrate only when he has taken cognizance of the offence.[6]

(2) A, a Magistrate who is competent to take cognizance of an offence on complaint, received a complaint and examined the complainant on oath. A must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the offence, as otherwise he could not examine the complainant on oath under S. 200.[7]

(3) A, a Magistrate who is competent to take cognizance of an offence on complainant, receives a complaint from a public servant, and holds a preliminary inquiry himself under S. 202. A must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the offence inasmuch as he could hold the inquiry under S. 202, only if he had taken cognizance of the offence.[8]

(4) A, a District Magistrate, while holding an inquiry under the Land Revenue Code, came to the conclusion that X had committed an offence. He recorded an order directing his prosecution and transferred the case to B, a Subordinate Magistrate. It was held that A must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the offence under Cl. (c) of S. 190.[9] Where, however, in a similar case it was found as a fact that the District Magistrate had not applied his mind to the offence with a view to initiate judicial proceedings against the offender, it was held that it was the Subordinate Magistrate who must be deemed to have cognizance of the offence.[10]

As will be seen from Note 17, infra, where a Magistrate obtains information or suspects the commission of an offence, he is not bound at once to take cognizance of such offence. He may like to verify the information or confirm the suspicion before taking cognizance of the offence. Proceedings which he may take for the purposes of such verification or confirmation, really fall within Cl. (b) referred to in Note 3, ante, and do not amount to taking cognizance of the offence for the purposes of the Code. In such cases the Magistrate will be considered to have taken cognizance, only after such verification or confirmation.

(2) A District Magistrate received a petition stating that the jurors in a Sessions case had been bribed and praying that he should take steps for an appeal being filed against the acquittal in the case. The District Magistrate thereupon directed a Sub-Magistrate to inquire into the matter and report to him. On receipt of the report he proceeded against a certain person for the offence of attempting to bribe the jurors. Held, that he did not take cognizance of the offence when ordering the inquiry by the Subordinate Magistrate but only did so under Cl. (c) on receipt of the report.[12]

(3) A Magistrate received by post information that an offence had been committed by certain persons. He sent the papers to the Police for investigation and report, and on receipt of the report he directed the issue of process against the accused. Held, that he did not take cognizance on the information received by post but only took cognizance on the police-report.[13]

(4) A Magistrate who suspected the commission of an offence by a certain person directed the police to charge-sheet him, and on the receipt of the charge-sheet tried him for the offence. Held that the Magistrate took cognizance on the police charge-sheet and not under Cl. (c) of this section. The very fact that he ordered the police to put in a charge-sheet was held to show that he did not take cognizance on his own knowledge or suspicion but only on the police charge-sheet.[14]

proceedings were started against the accused. Held that under the circumstances, the Magistrate did not take cognizance on the previous day when he was in the village but only the next day when the complaint was received.[15]

Where a question arises as to under which clause of this section cognizance is taken in a particular case, the test may be applied as to whether the Magistrate was empowered to take cognizance under a particular clause. Thus where a Magistrate is not empowered to take cognizance under Cl. (c), it may be presumed that he did not intend to take cognizance under that clause.[16] Similarly it may be considered whether, in the particular circumstances of the case it is open to the Magistrate to take cognizance under a particular clause. Thus where a complaint was made to a Magistrate, and he endorsed thereon the remark that he took cognizance under Cl. (c), it was held by one of the Judges in the case[17] that "information" under Cl. (c) only referred to such information as did not constitute a complaint or the report of a Police-officer, and that therefore the Magistrate could not have taken cognizance under Cl. (c) but must be held to have done so only under Cl. (a). According to the other Judges in the case, however, it was open to the Magistrate to treat the complaint as "information" under Cl. (c) and proceed under that clause, but that as the Magistrate in question was not empowered to take cognizance under Cl. (c), he must be presumed not to have done so but to have proceeded only under Cl. (a).

5. Taking cognizance if refers to the particular individual who is charged for the time being.—There is a different of opinion as to whether the existence of a specific individual as an accused person, is a necessary essential before a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence. On the one hand it has been held that the taking cognizance of an offence in the sense in which it is used in the Code [see Cl. (a), Note 3] refers to the particular person who is charged at the time. Thus where in the course of a Sessions trial one of the prosecution witnesses was suspected of being involved in the offence under trial and he was thereupon transferred from the witness-box to the dock and tried along with the person originally committed to the Sessions, it was held that such a proceeding amounted to "taking cognizance of an offence" and was therefore precluded under S. 193.[1] On the other hand it has been held in the undermentioned cases[2] that a Court takes cognizance of an offence and not an offender and that therefore when proceedings are commenced against a new accused by a Court having seisin of a case it does not take cognizance of any offence. The reasons for such a view appear to be two:—

(1) the expression "taking cognizance of an offence" contains no express reference to any offender;

(2) under S. 190, a Court can take cognizance of an offence on a complaint and a complaint according to the definition in S. 4 (h) need not specify any particular person as having committed the offence.

It is submitted that the above view is not correct. As has been seen in Note 3, the expression "taking cognizance of an offence" has the limited meaning of taking notice of an offence with the intention of initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of that offence. This shows that before cognizance is taken of the offence, the offender should be a specified individual so as to enable the Court to initiate proceedings against him.

6. Taking cognizance refers to the particular offence charged for the time being.—The expression "taking cognizance of an offence" has reference to a specific offence.[1] Hence, when a Court takes cognizance of an offence it does so with reference to the particular offence then charged and not also with reference to other offences that may subsequently appear in the course of the proceedings to be involved in the criminal transaction under inquiry. When a Court commences proceedings with reference to any such offence that is subsequently disclosed it takes cognizance of that.

Illustration.

(1) A Court takes cognizance of an offence of rape. In the course of the proceedings it is found that the offence really amounts to adultery and not rape. If the Court takes action against the accused with reference to the offence of adultery, it would be taking cognizance of that offence. Hence, under S. 199 of the Code the Court cannot take such action in the absence of a complaint from the husband or other persons mentioned in that section.[2]

(2) A Court takes cognizance of an offence under Ss. 352 (assault) and 504 (insult) of the Penal Code. In the course of the proceedings it appears that the offence really committed by the accused was defamation (S. 500). If the Court takes action against the accused with reference to defamation, it would be taking cognizance of the offence. Hence, under S. 198 of the Code, the Court cannot take such action in the absence of a complaint from the person aggrieved by the offence.[3] See also the undermentioned case.[4]

7. Taking cognizance on different occasions in the course of judicial proceedings about same criminal transaction.—See Notes 2, 5 and 6.

8. Taking cognizance of offence and becoming seised of case relating to criminal transaction involving such offence—Distinction between.—The taking cognizance of an offence and becoming seised of the case relating to the criminal transaction involving such offence are not identical.[1] An offence is defined in S. 4 (o) as any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. A criminal transaction may consist of several offences. These offences may be committed by several persons. When a Court becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction it becomes seised of the entire case. In other words, the Court obtains jurisdiction over all the offences and all the persons involved in the transaction (provided that it is otherwise open to the Court to proceed in respect of such offences or persons). The Court may first proceed on the footing that a particular offence has been committed and that a particular person has committed it. But in the course of the proceedings it may be disclosed that the criminal transaction under inquiry involves a different offence or that a different person is implicated in the transaction. But the seisin of the Court extends not only to the offence with reference to which and the accused person against whom the judicial proceedings originally commenced but also to other offences that may subsequently appear to be involved in the transaction and to other persons that may subsequently appear to be implicated therein. Hence, when proceedings are started with reference to such offences or persons, the Court cannot be said to become seised of the case as to the criminal transaction. What the Court does in such cases is only to exercise a power which it possesses by virtue of the seisin it has already acquired over the case relating to the criminal transaction in question.

But a specific offence and a specific accused person are among the essentials of taking cognizance of an offence. (See Notes 5 and 6.) Hence, such taking cognizance (in the sense of initiation of judicial proceedings) refers to the particular offence alleged and the particular person accused for the time being. It does not extend to other offences that may be subsequently disclosed or other persons that may subsequently appear to be concerned in the transaction. When the Court institutes proceedings with reference to such offences or persons, it must be deemed to take cognizance of an offence again. (See Notes 5 and 6 above).

Thus, becoming seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction and taking cognizance of an offence are distinct aspects of the judicial proceedings relating to a criminal transaction. The former applies to the entire transaction without special reference to any particular offence or any particular individual, while the latter refers to a specific offence alleged to be involved in the transaction and to a specific individual alleged to have committed such offence. Again, the former occurs only once in the course of the judicial proceedings relating to a criminal transaction, viz., at their commencement, while the latter occurs not only at the commencement of such proceedings but also subsequently whenever action is taken with reference to a different offence which appears to be involved in the criminal transaction under inquiry or against a different person appearing to be implicated therein.

But the two aspects are closely connected with each other and are interdependant. Thus, a Court becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction when for the first time it takes cognizance of an offence involved in the transaction. Similarly, when, subsequent to the initiation of judicial proceedings with reference to a particular offence or a particular person, the Court takes action with reference to other offences involved in the transaction or other persons implicated therein, it exercises a power which it has by virtue of its being seised of the case relating to the criminal transaction in question.

9. Initiation of proceedings with reference to one offence some other offence appearing to be involved in the transaction—Action with reference to such offence is not under this section.—Where proceedings are started with reference to one offence but it subsequently appears in the course of the proceedings that a different offence or an additional offence has been committed in the course of the same transaction, the Court can proceed with reference to such offence against any person who appears to be implicated in it.[1] In taking such action the Court as has been seen already takes cognizance of such offence by virtue of its being seised of the case. It does not take cognizance under Cl. (c) of this section.[2] In the undermentioned case[3] it was observed that in such cases cognizance is taken under that clause of this section under which proceedings were originally started in the case. It is submitted with respect that this view is not correct for the following reasons:— S. 190, Note 9.

(a) It will be unduly straining the ordinary meaning of words to hold that cognizance of an offence is taken on that basis of a material which not even suggests the existence of the offence.

(b) This section applies only to the initiation of judicial proceedings when a Court for the first time becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction. It does not apply to cases where subsequently it appears that the transaction involves a different offence and action is taken with reference to such offence. (See Pt. 4, below).

The true principle, therefore, seems to be that in such cases, cognizance of the offence is not taken at all under this section. Cognizance is taken by virtue of a power which vests in every Court having seisin of the case relating to a criminal transaction and which is independent of this section. Such a power is based on the principle that a Court having seisin of the case relating to a criminal transaction is bound to see that justice is done that the offender is brought to book though the offence originally charged may not be the same as appears subsequently to have been involved in the transaction. This principle is recognised in various sections of the Code. For instance, it is recognised in Ss. 210, 227, 237, 238, 246, 254, 346, 347, etc. Such a power as said already, is vested in every Court having seisin of the case relating to a criminal transaction and is not confined to the Magistrates mentioned in this section.[4] (See also Note 10, Pt. 12).

The abovementioned power of taking cognizance of a new offence disclosed in the course of judicial proceedings with reference to another offence applies not only to the person originally accused but also to any other person who may appear to be implicated in it.

Illustrations.

(1) Proceedings are instituted on a complaint against A and B in respect of offences under Ss. 352 and 354 of the Penal Code. In the course of the proceedings it is found that an offence has been committed under S. 193 and that C also is involved in it. The Court can proceed under S. 193 against C as well as against A and B.[5]

(2) A complaint is filed against A under Ss. 342 and 363 of the Penal Code. On evidence being taken it is found that A did not commit any offence but that B committed offences under Ss. 342, 352 and 363. The Court can proceed against B in respect of these offences.[6]

But if the offence that is subsequently disclosed pertains to a distinct transaction, the abovementioned power cannot apply to it and cognizance can be taken of such offence only under this section.[7]

10. Initiation of proceedings against one person—Another person found implicated in the criminal transaction under inquiry—Action against such person.—Suppose in the course of proceedings initiated against A it transpires that B is implicated in the criminal transaction under inquiry. In such a case, the Court can add or substitute B as an accused person in the case and proceed against him.[1] This power, however, is subject to the condition that it is otherwise open to the Court to proceed against B. Thus by force of S. 193 a Sessions Court cannot add B as an accused person in the absence of an order of commitment by a duly empowered Magistrate.[2] Similarly, it is conceived if B is a public servant coming within the terms of S. 197, he cannot be proceeded against in the above manner in the absence of the previous sanction referred to in the section.

The fact that B is implicated may appear from the evidence in the case or otherwise. Thus, the fact of B's implication may be learnt by the Court on a perusal of the Police diaries in the case.[3] Similarly, the fact may be brought to the notice of the Court by an application for issue of warrant against him.[3-a] If the fact appears from the evidence in the case against A and if B is present in Court, S. 351 would apply and the Court can detain him in custody and proceed against him under that section.[4] In other cases, the Court can take such steps to compel B's appearance as may be open to it under the law. For instance, if the presiding officer is a Magistrate, he can, under S. 204 issue a summons or warrant against B[5] or have him arrested in his presence under S. 65, ante.

The question has arisen whether action taken as above amounts to taking cognizance under Cl. (c) of this section. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. The general opinion is that Cl. (c) of this section does not apply to such cases.[6] But in a few decisions it has been held that Cl. (c) applies to such cases.[7] It is submitted that the latter view is not correct, the reason being that S. 190 applies only to the initiation of judicial proceedings at the time when the Court becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction and not to cases where action is taken against a person (not originally included in the proceedings) who subsequently appears to be implicated in the criminal transaction under inquiry. (See Pt. 12 below.) S. 190, Note 10.

The former of the two views set forth above is supported on the following grounds:—

(1) In such cases, the Court does not take cognizance of an offence at all. A Court takes cognizance of an offence and not of an offender and when an accused person is added or substituted in the course of proceedings already started the Court does not take cognizance of an offence.[8] It has been seen in Note 5, ante, that such a view is not correct.

(2) In such cases, the Court takes cognizance under that clause of S. 190 under which proceedings were originally initiated.[9] It is submitted that this view is not also correct for the following reasons:—

(a) it would be unduly straining the ordinary meaning of words to hold that a Court takes cognizance against a person on a material which does not even suggest his implication in the offence;

(b) this section applies only where a Court first becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction and not to cases where subsequently action is taken against persons not originally charged. (See also, Note 9).

(3) In such cases, the Court is not taking cognizance under this section at all but does so in the exercise of a power which it has independently of this section.[10]

S. 190, Notes 10—11.

It is submitted that the third view set forth above is correct. It is based on the principle that it is the duty and is within the power of all Courts having seisin of the case relating to a criminal transaction to see that justice is done and to proceed against any person who may be found to be involved in the transaction notwithstanding that such person might not have been originally charged with any offence.[11] Such a power vests in every Court having seisin of case and is not confined to the Magistrates empowered to proceed under this section.[12]

Further, it has been held that no other Court can proceed against any person in the above position. In other words, where subsequent to the initiation of proceedings against one person in regard to a certain criminal transaction it is alleged that another person is implicated in such transaction no Court other than the one which already has seisin of the case relating to the transaction can proceed against such person.[13] (See also, Note 17 below).

Illustration.

On an investigation by the police in respect of the looting of a house, one person, J was sent in for trial and the case was made over to a subordinate Magistrate. Subsequent to this, or a representation by the Superintendent of Police, the District Magistrate issued warrants against K and L in order that they might also be tried. Held that so long as the case relating to the occurrence remained with the subordinate Magistrate no other Magistrate was competent to deal with it, and as the case had never been withdrawn by the District Magistrate to his own file he could not pass orders directing proceedings to be taken against other persons.[14]

But if the offence imputed to such person relates to a distinct criminal transaction the above bar does not apply.[15]

Illustration.

The inquiry by a Court into one criminal conspiracy discloses the existence of another conspiracy. Proceedings in respect of the latter conspiracy can be initiated before a different Court.[16]

The offence in respect of which a new accused is added or substituted under the above power may be the same as that in respect of which proceedings were originally initiated,[17] or may be a different offence provided it is alleged to have been committed in the course of the same criminal transaction as is under inquiry. (See Note 9, Pts. 5 and 6.)

11. Cognizances in cases where the facts disclose a graver as well as a minor offence.—Where the same facts disclose a graver offence as well as a minor offence, the prosecution must ordinarily be for the graver offence.[1] But a conviction for the minor offence in such cases will not be illegal.[2] If for any reason the Court is unable to proceed with reference to the more serious offence, the question arises whether it can proceed with reference to the minor offence. As to this, see Note 12 below.

12. Cognizance in cases where previous sanction or complaint of particular person or Court is necessary for prosecution of offence.—A Court can take cognizance of any offence which appears to be involved in a criminal transaction irrespective of the sections actually mentioned in the complant (see Note 19 below) or the offences originally charged against the accused. (See Note 19 below.) Suppose now that an offence which appears to have been committed is one for the prosecution of which certain pre-requisites such as the previous sanction of a particular authority or the complaint of a particular person or Court, are necessary and that such pre-requisites are wanting in the case it is clear that the Court cannot take cognizance of such offence. (See Note 6, Pts. 2, 3 and 4). But can the Court take cognizance of any other offence which appears, on the facts of the case, to have been committed and with which it is otherwise open to the Court to deal? Thus where an offence under S. 211, Penal Code appears to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in a Court, but no complaint has been preferred by the Court concerned (which is a pre-requisite for taking cognizance of the offence) but the facts of the case disclose an offence under S. 182, Penal Code in addition to an offence under S. 211, it is clear that the Court cannot take cognizance of the offence under S. 211. But can it take cognizance of the offence under S. 182? On this question there is a conflict of judicial opinion and the following views have been expressed in the matter:—

(1) The offence under S. 182, can be taken cognizance of.[1]

(2) The offence under S. 182, cannot be taken cognizance of.[2]

(3) Though the proper course may be not to take cognizance of the offence under S. 182 and though proceedings in regard to the offence may be quashed in their earlier stages, yet, if the proceedings have been completed and the accused has been convicted of the offence, the conviction cannot be set aside as illegal.[3]

(4) The offence under S. 182, cannot be taken cognizance of where the complaint specifically charges an offence under S. 211.[4]

S. 190, Notes 12—16.

(5) Where the complaint is specifically under S. 182, the Court is not only competent but bound to take cognizance of an offence under that section if such offence is constituted by the facts stated in the complaint. The Court cannot refuse to take cognizance of such offence on the ground that the facts also disclose an offence under S. 211 the necessary conditions for proceeding with reference to which are not present.[5]

13. Cognizance of same offence by different Courts.—See Note 17.

14. Taking cognizance, a judicial act.—As seen in Note 3, ante, the expression "taking cognizance of an offence" signifies the judicial proceedings with reference to the offence. Hence, taking cognizance of an offence is a judicial act though it may be only with a view to initiate such proceedings.[1] The contrary view expressed by some of the judges in the undermentioned case[2] is, it is submitted, not correct.

It is also clear that acts of a Magistrate not amounting to taking cognizance of an offence in any sense of the term as defined in Note 3, ante, would fall outside the province of judicial proceedings with reference to the offence. Hence, such act would not be judicial acts with reference to the offence.[3]

15. "Except as hereinafter provided".—As instances of the exceptions to the general power conferred by this section reference may be made to the restrictions imposed by Ss. 195, 196, 196-A, 197, 198 and 199. By virtue of S. 1 and S. 5, sub-S. (2), the provisions of this section must also be held to be subject to any special enactments that may be in force for the time being as to the institution of proceedings in regard to offences under such enactments.[1]

16. Who can take cognizance under this section.—As seen in Note 3, ante, the power of taking cognizance under this section is a special power which does not belong to all Magistrates although they may be competent to try or commit the accused for trial. The power belongs only to the Magistrates mentioned in the section. Hence, proceedings initiated by a Magistrate who is not

Re. 28, p. 75, Kirpal Singh v. Emperor (The Excise Act being a special Act, its provisions as to the mode of institution of proceedings for offences under that Act are not affected by the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure in S. 191 as they are expressly saved by S. 1).

duly empowered to take cognizance under this section are liable to be set aside.[1] But such proceedings are not necessarily void. Under S. 529 (e) if a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance of an offence under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of this section erroneously does so in good faith his proceedings cannot be set aside merely on the ground of his want of authority.[1-a] But if the Magistrate has "taken cognizance" under Cl. (c) without having the power to do so, his proceedings are, under S. 530 (k), void.[2] S. 190, Notes 16—17.

Under sub-S. (2), the Local Government or the District Magistrate, and under sub-S. (3) the Local Government can empower Magistrates to take cognizance of offences under the various clauses of this section. But such power can be conferred only in respect of offences which the Magistrate in question can try or commit for trial.[3] Moreover, a third class Magistrate cannot be empowered to take cognizance under Cl. (c) of the section.[3-a]

A power specially conferred upon a Magistrate under this section continues until it is duly withdrawn by the proper authority and remains personal to him irrespective of the local area wherein he may be serving for the time being.[4] In the undermentioned case[5] it was held that a power to take cognizance on information does not extend to taking cognizance on the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion. A special power conferred on a Magistrate to take cognizance of offences on complaints is sufficient to enable him to take cognizance of complaints under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. No further special authorisation is necessary in respect of such complaints in view of the definition of the word 'offence' in S. 4, Cl. (o).[6]

In the undermentioned case[6-a] a special Magistrate was appointed to try a case. It was held that the power to try would necessarily include the power to take cognizance.

The restrictions under this section as to the authorities by whom cognizance of offences can be taken apply only to cases in which the proceedings are initiated under this section. In other cases such restrictions do not apply (see Note 2).

As to the jurisdiction to take cognizance of offence alleged to be committed by European British Subjects, see the undermentioned cases.[7]

17. "May take cognizance".—It has been held in a series of decisions that the use of the word "may" does not make it optional with the Magistrate to take cognizance on a complaint which prima facie discloses an offence by a certain person. The reason given is that the expression refers to the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance in one or other of the modes specified in the section. Hence according to these decisions, when a Magistrate duly empowered to take cognizance of offences on a complaint receives a complaint the allegations in which prima facie show that an offence has been committed by a person, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance on such complaint and proceed to examine the complainant on oath.[1] A contrary view has been expressed in the undermentioned case[1-a] by the Patna High Court. It has also been held that a Magistrate is not bound to take cognizance on the report of a Police-officer[2] or under Cl. (c) on his own knowledge or suspicion or on information not amounting to a complaint.[3] There does not seem to be any valid reason as to why there should be a distinction in this respect between the taking cognizance of an offence under Cl. (a) and Cls. (b) and (c). It is submitted that the view that the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance whenever a complaint is made is not correct.

It has been seen in Note 10 (see Note 10, Pts. 13 to 16) that where subsequent to the initiation of proceedings against one person in regard to a certain criminal transaction it is alleged that another person is implicated in such transaction no Court other than the one which has already seisin of the case relating to the transaction can proceed against such person. Similarly, it has been held that where proceedings have been started in respect of one offence alleged to be involved in a criminal transaction and subsequently it is proposed to start proceedings in respect of other offences involved in such transaction it is not regular for any Court other than the one which is already in seisin of the case relating to the transaction to start such proceedings.[4] In some decisions, however, it has been held that the fact that cognizance of an offence has been taken by one Court does not (by itself) preclude any other Court from taking cognizance of the same offence[5] but that multiplicity of proceedings should be avoided by suitable orders of transfer.[6]

Where a case pending before one Court is transferred to another Court, the latter can take cognizance of any offence involved in the case and proceed against any person implicated therein.[7]

The order of a Magistrate declining to take cognizance of an offence does not operate as autre fois acquit and does not preclude cognizance being taken of the same offence again.[8]

The pendency of civil proceedings concerning the matter involved is no bar to the initiation of criminal proceedings under this section.[9] Nor is it an objection to such proceedings that a civil action is maintainable in respect of the matter (unless the dispute is purely of a civil nature.)[10] The fact that the accused (a soldier) has been departmentally punished for his misdeed is no bar to his criminal prosecution.[11]

Illegalities or irregularities in regard to the arrest of the accused person do not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance of the case against him.[12]

18. Limitation.—See S. 4 (h), Note 14.

19. "Upon receiving complaint of facts which constitute offence".—For definition of complaint, see S. 4 (h). As has been seen in the notes to that section, a complaint can be made by any person who is aware of the facts of the case, except in cases where there may be a special provision to the contrary. Hence a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence on a complaint by whomsoever the complaint may be presented. It has been held by two of the judges in the undermentioned case[1] that a Magistrate can prefer a complaint to himself and can take cognizance of such complaint. The reason given is that taking cognizance does not involve any judicial act and that therefore there is nothing anomalous in a Magistrate taking cognizance of his own complaint. There is, however, a difference of opinion on the question whether 'taking cognizance' is a judicial act for which, see Note 14, ante.

The motive of the complainant in making a complaint is immaterial. A

Magistrate can take cognizance on a complaint though it is vindictive[2] or has been actuated by malicious feeling.[3] Provided that a complaint contains the elements mentioned in S. 4 (h), the form in which it is couched is immaterial. Moreover, any irregularity in this respect is, it has been held, curable under S. 529 (e).[3-a] (See also Notes under S. 529).

A complaint on which a Magistrate can take cognizance under this section must state the facts which constitute the offence charged.[4] If the facts stated in the complaint do not constitute any offence, the Magistrate cannot take cognizance on such complaint.[4-a] But the complaint need not state all the facts on which the accused is to be charged.[5] Further, any defect in the complaint due to the insufficiency of facts stated therein is curable under S. 529 (e).[6]

In taking cognizance on a complaint, a Magistrate is not confined to the sections mentioned in the complaint. He can take cognizance of any offence which, in his opinion is constituted by the facts stated in the complaint, provided that he is otherwise competent to do so.[7]

20. Report of Police-officer—Cl. (b).—Clause (b) as it stood before the amendment of 1923 contained the words "upon a police report of such facts." These words would of course include police reports in cases which could be investigated by the police under Chap. XIV of the Code.[1] But there was a conflict of opinion as to whether the words would include reports in cases which the police had no authority to investigate under Chap. XIV. On the one hand it was held that the words "police report" referred only to reports in cases which the police could investigate under Chap. XIV, i.e., in cases of (a) cognizable offences and (b) non-cognizable offences into which the police have been ordered by a Magistrate under S. 155 to investigate. According to this view, therefore, reports of the police as to non-cognizable offences which the Police had not been duly ordered by a Magistrate to investigate were not included in the expression "police report".[2] On the other hand it was held by the Chief Court of Lower Burmah[3] and in certain decisions of the Patna High Court[4] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Upper Burmah[5] that the expression "police report" included reports as to non-cognizable offences in cases which the Police had not been ordered by any Magistrate to investigate under S. 155. S. 190, Note 20.

The substitution of the words "report in writing of such facts made by a Police-officer" for the words "police report of such facts" has not made matters clearer. The words "report in writing of such facts made by a Police-officer" would of course include a report by the police in any case which they can investigate under Chap. XIV, i.e., the report by the Police in a cognizable case or in a non-cognizable case which they have been ordered by a Magistrate to investigate.[6] But there is still a conflict of opinion as to whether they would include the reports of the Police in a non-cognizable case which the Police have not been ordered to investigate. The general view is that the words as now used in the section are not technical as the words "Police report" before the amendment were held to be, and that they would include such report.[7] A contrary view, has, however, been expressed by the Bombay High Court in the undermentioned cases.[8] A similar view was held by the Lahore High Court in an earlier decision,[9] though in its later decisions that High Court also adopted the general view on the question.[10]

The question also arises whether in cases which the Police can investigate under Chap. XIV this clause only refers to their final report under S. 173 or includes also other reports. On this question, before the amendment of the clause referred to above, there was a conflict of decisions. The general view was that the clause applied not only to the final report under S. 173 but also to other reports.[11] The Calcutta High Court however, held that the expression "Police report" only referred to the final report under S. 173.[12] Under the present clause, it is settled that it includes not only the final report under S. 173, but also other reports made by the Police.[13]

It is thus clear from the above discussion that the general consensus of judicial opinion since the amendment of the section is that the words, "report of a Police-officer" have a wide meaning and include any report of a Police-officer as to an offence whether the case is one which he can investigate or not and whether the report is in any particular form or not. But in order to constitute a report of a Police-officer even in this broad sense, the allegation must be made by a Police-officer as such and not as a private person.[14]

A report of a Police-officer on which a cognizance can be taken under this clause must give the facts constituting the offence charged.[15] If the facts recited in the report do not constitute any offence the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of such offence on it.[16] But the report need not state what each prosecution witness named therein is going to depose to.[17]

The offence of which cognizance is taken on a Police report need not be the same as that to which the Police investigation was originally directed. Thus, where a person, gives information to the Police of the commission of a cognizable offence and the Police after investigation find that the information is maliciously false and make a report recommending the prosecution of the informer the Magistrate can take cognizance of the offence of bringing a false charge under S. 211 of the Penal Code as on the report of the Police, provided that it is otherwise open to him to do so.[18]

If in the opinion of the Magistrate the facts stated in the report of a Police-officer amount to an offence he can take cognizance of such offence on such report although, in the opinion of the Police-officer, the facts do not amount to such offence.[19] The reason is that the section only requires a report of the facts constituting an offence and that the opinion of the reporting officer is not material.[20] Similarly, a Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence on the facts contained in the report of a Police-officer although in the opinion of such officer there is not sufficient evidence to justify taking further action.[21]

The clause requires that the report of a Police-officer under it must be in writing. Hence the view expressed before the amendment that even an oral report would come within the purview of the clause[22] is no longer good law.

It has been held that where a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on the statement of a Police-officer which does not amount to a "report in writing of a Police-officer" within this clause, the case is covered by the provisions of S. 529 (e) so that if the Magistrate has acted in good faith, the proceedings initiated by him are not affected.[23] (See Notes under S. 529).

It has been seen that it is settled law since the amendment of 1923 that a Magistrate can take cognizance not only on the final report of the Police under S. 173 or charge sheet but also on other reports of a preliminary nature. Suppose a Magistrate has taken cognizance with reference to certain accused persons on the basis of a preliminary report of the Police. If in the final report or charge sheet subsequently submitted by the Police, the names of some of the accused persons as to whom the Magistrate has taken cognizance are omitted, the Court is not bound to drop further proceedings against them on this ground. The omission of the names in the charge sheet or the final report in such a case is nothing more than an advice tendered by the prosecuting authority and the Magistrate is not bound to follow such advice. But as a general rule it will not be proper to disregard the opinion of the Police in such matters without giving any reasons for differing from it.[24]

S. 190, Notes 20—21.

This clause applies only to the report of a Police-officer. But under special statutory provisions, the report of any other officer also may be treated as the report of a Police-officer for the purposes of this section.[25]

Police reports are not in themselves evidence and ought not to be treated as such.[26]

See also Note 4, above.

21. Complaint by Police-officer.—S. 4 (h) excludes from the definition of a complainant, the report of a Police-officer. The wide meaning given to the expression "report of Police-officer" since the amendment of Cl. (b) of this section in 1923 (See Note 20 above) does not, however, deprive a Police-officer of his right to make a complaint instead of a report.[1] He can make such a complaint in respect of any offence whether he can investigate into it or not.[2] Moreover where the allegation of a Police-officer is held not to amount to a report of Police-officer it can be treated as a complaint if it otherwise satisfies the requirements of the definition of a complaint.[3]

Prior to the amendment of S. 200 in 1923 by the addition of Cl. (aa) thereto, the question whether the information laid before a Magistrate by a Police-officer was a report of a Police-officer or a complaint was of importance for the following reason. If the information was a complaint, then the examination of the Police-officer under S. 200 became necessary;[4] if the information was held to be a Police report, then such examination was not necessary.[5] A question also arose as to whether the absence of such examination (assuming the information only amounted to a complaint and not a Police report) was fatal to the proceedings;[6] or only an irregularity curable under S. 537.[7] In view of the amendment of S. 200 by the addition of Cl. (aa) such discussion has become academical so far as the question of the examination of the Police-officer is concerned. The reason is this. Section 200, Cl. (aa) provides inter alia that when a complaint in writing is made by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties, the complainant need not be examined on oath under the section. A Police-officer being clearly a public servant, his examination on oath is thus not necessary, even if it be held that the information which he lays before a Magistrate in his official capacity is a complaint and not a Police report. Hence, whether the information laid by Police-officer before a Magistrate is treated as a Police report or as a complaint, his examination on oath is not necessary.

But, the question as to whether such information amounts to a complaint or a report of a Police-officer may be material for other purposes. Thus, there are various sections of the Code which apply only to cases started on a complaint; for instance, see Ss. 202, 203, 247, 248 and 259. In such cases, the above question will be a material one.

22. Power of Magistrate to order Police to charge sheet any person.— There is no provision in the Code authorising a Magistrate to order the Police to charge sheet any person. The Code only empowers certain Magistrate to order the Police to investigate cases (See Ss. 155, 156, 196-B and 202) and the Police are required to make a report to the Magistrate as to the result of their investigation (See S. 173). But the Police are entitled to come to their own conclusion in making their report and the Magistrate cannot order them to put in a charge sheet when they are of the opinion that the case is not true.[1] The Patna High Court, however, seemed to hold that it is a proper procedure for a Magistrate who thinks it fit to proceed judicially against any person to order the Police to charge sheet him.[2] It is submitted that such a view is not correct. As pointed out by the Allahabad High Court in the undermentioned case[3] the proper procedure when a Magistrate proposes to take judicial action against any person is to take cognizance of the case against him and not to send the papers to the Police so as to deprive him of his right under S. 191 to have his case tried by some other Magistrate or by the Sessions Court. Moreover, when a charge sheet is filed against any person at the instance of the Magistrate, and the latter takes cognizance on such charge sheet, though apparently the case is taken cognizance of on a Police report, the Magistrate being the real originator of the proceedings is not competent to try the case (See S. 556, Note 20) and the accused is entitled to have the case transferred to some other Magistrate.[4]

23. "Upon information—That such offence has been committed"— Cl. (c).—The object of this clause is to enable a Magistrate to see that justice is vindicated, notwithstanding that the persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute.[1] Hence, the proper use of the power conferred by the clause is when a Magistrate has reason to believe the commission of an offence but, is unable to proceed in the ordinary way owing to the absence of any complaint or Police report about it.[2] Therefore, when there is a complaint or Police report before a Magistrate he cannot ignore it and proceed under this clause.[3]

The "information" under this clause may be conveyed in any form. Thus, it may be in the form of a letter to the Magistrate.[4] Or, it may be in the form of an order for the prosecution of certain persons.[5] Further, the information need not be given with the object of moving the Magistrate to take steps for the punishment of an offence. Thus, a petition to the Magistrate praying for action under S. 107 or S. 145 may contain the information on which the Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under this section.[6] But unless the information leads to the conclusion that an offence has been committed, a Magistrate cannot act on it under this clause.[6-a]

The information need not be personally given; it may be sent by post.[7] It must, however, be given to the Magistrate directly. Thus, suppose A gives certain information to B and the latter makes a complaint to a Magistrate on the basis of such information. The Magistrate takes cognizance on such complaint. In such cases, he cannot be held to take cognizance on the information given by A.[8]

The information under this clause may be received from any person (other than a Police-officer). Thus, a Magistrate can act on the confession of the accused himself though it is not recorded under S. 164.[9] He can also act on an anonymous communication to him.[10]

The information under this clause may be oral.[11] But it is most desirable that a Magistrate should record the information on which he acts[12] though he need not disclose the source of the information.[13] But the omission to make such record is only an irregularity which does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings.[14]

It is not necessary that the information on which a Magistrate acts under this clause must be received by him in his capacity as a Magistrate. It is open to him to act on information received by him otherwise than in such capacity.[15]

As said already, a Magistrate cannot take cognizance under this clause on the information received from a Police-officer.[16] If, however, such information amounts to a report of a Police-officer or a complaint, it can be the basis for taking cognizance under Cl. (b) or Cl. (a). S. 190, Notes 23—24.

"His own knowledge or suspicion".—This clause enables a Magistrate to take cognizance not only on information but also on his own knowledge or suspicion.[17] Such knowledge or suspicion may be based on facts which come under the Magistrate's notice otherwise than in his capacity as Magistrate.[18] But it cannot be based on information given by a Police-officer.[19]

See also Notes 4, 9, 10 and 22.

24. Clauses of section alternative but not mutually exclusive.—It has been seen that the expression "taking cognizance of an offence" in this section refers to the initiation of a judicial proceeding with reference to an offence at the time a Court first becomes seised of the case relating to a criminal transaction. The materials on which such action can be taken are divided by the section into three classes:—

(1) Complaints [Cl. (a)].
(2) Reports of Police-officers [Cl. (b)].
(3) Information received from any person other than a Police-officer or the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion [Cl. (c)].

Any one of the above materials is sufficient to enable a Magistrate to initiate proceedings under this section. In other words, the different clauses of the section under which cognizance can be taken are alternative, and not mutually exclusive. Hence, cognizance of the same offence can be taken under more than one of the above clauses. Thus, when a Magistrate has before him a complaint and a police report about the same offence he can take cognizance on both.[1]

Illustrations.

(1) J complains to a Magistrate about an offence by B. The Magistrate receives also a report from the police about the same offence. The Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence and proceeds against B. It is contended that the Magistrate must be deemed to have taken cognizance on J's complaint and that as he failed to examine him under S. 200 the entire proceedings are vitiated. Held, that the Magistrate need not be deemed to have taken cognizance on the complaint exclusively. He may be held to have taken cognizance on the police report also and hence his failure to examine J does not vitiate the proceedings.[2]

(2) D complains to a Magistrate about an offence and mentions A as having committed it. The police also send a report about the occurrence to the Magistrate in which they accuse B of the alleged offence. The Magistrate takes cognizance against both A and B. B contends that the Magistrate having already taken cognizance on D's complaint under Cl. (a) of this section, it is not competent to the Magistrate to take cognizance of the same offence under Cl. (b) also. Held, that the contention is untenable and that a Magistrate can take cognizance of the same offence both under Cl. (a) and Cl. (b) of the section.[3]

25. Revision.—The proceedings of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence under this section is a judicial proceeding.[1] (See Note 14 above) and as such is subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.[2] Hence, where a Magistrate institutes proceedings against any person without there being sufficient materials for doing so, the High Court can interfere in revision and quash the proceedings.[3].

An order of a Magistrate refusing to take cognizance of an offence has also been dealt with by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction in the undermentioned cases.[4] Such an order being virtually a refusal by a Court to apply its mind to an offence in its judicial capacity, cannot be treated as a judicial order, (see Note 14 above). But it is conceived that the interference by the High Court in the above cases would be justified under its general powers of superintendence over Subordinate Courts. (See Government of India Act, S. 107.)

In the undermentioned case[5] it was held that the order of a District Magistrate directing the police to charge sheet certain persons was a judicial order and subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. It is submitted that the view that such an order is a judicial order is open to doubt. (See Note 14 above).

1. Scope and applicability of section.—This section only applies to cases in which a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under S. 190, sub-S. (1), Cl. (c). In such cases, a Magistrate takes cognizance suo motu either on his own knowledge or suspicion or on information furnished by some person (not being a Police-officer) who is not prepared to take the responsibility of filing a complaint. Hence, the law (under this section) partly out of regard for the susceptibilities of the accused and partly to inspire confidence in the administration of justice, allows the accused the right to claim to be tried before another Court. But where the Court has been set in motion by a valid complaint or report of a Police-officer, such considerations do not apply and this section has no application.[1] (As to when a Magistrate may be said to have taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190, see Notes under S. 190).

This section may be compared to S. 556 below. The following points of distinction between the two sections may be noted:—

(1) S. 556 contemplates cases in which a Magistrate or Judge is personally interested in a case. This section applies to cases where a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence under Cl. (c) of S. 190, sub-S. (1). The two classes of cases are not identical. Thus, though a Magistrate may have taken cognizance of a case under Cl. (c) of S. 190, he may not be personally interested in the case within S. 556 and if he complies with the provisions of this section, the bar under S. 556 may not apply to him.[2] Conversely, though a Magistrate may be personally interested in a case within S. 556 he may not have taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190. In such cases, though this section does not apply, the Magistrate will be disqualified from trying the case.[3] But in several instances, both the sections may apply. Thus, a Magistrate may both have taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190 and also be personally interested in the case within S. 556. In such cases, although the accused does not exercise his option of demanding a trial by a different Court under this section, the bar under S. 556 would apply and the Magistrate would be incompetent to try the case.

(2) The bar under S. 556 cannot be waived by the accused. But the accused can waive his privilege under this section. In other words, under this section, if the accused on his being asked if he has any objection to his being tried by the Magistrate who has taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190 does not object, the Magistrate is not precluded from trying the case. (See Note 2). But under S. 556, the disqualification of the Judge or Magistrate to try the case in which he is personally interested is absolute (except in cases where the Appellate Court permits such trial).

(3) Under this section the disqualification of the Magistrate applies only to the trial of the case. It does not apply to a commitment of the accused to sessions; so that notwithstanding the objection of the accused a Magistrate who has taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190 can conduct the preliminary inquiry under Ch. 18 and commit the accused to the sessions. (See Note 3). But under S. 556, the Magistrate or Judge who is personally interested in the case can neither try the case nor commit the accused to sessions.

(4) This section only applies to cases where cognizance of an offence has been taken (see Note 6) while S. 556 is general in its terms and applies also to cases where there is no question of any offence being taken cognizance of.

2. Nature of accused's right under this section.—The right of accused under this section is to have his case tried by another Court. For this purpose, the section provides that the accused must be informed before any evidence is taken that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court and that if he objects to being tried by the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the case the case should be transferred to another Magistrate or be committed to the sessions. But the accused is not entitled to claim that his case must be tried by a particular Court.[1] Thus, he cannot insist that his case must be committed to the sessions and not sent to another Magistrate. All that the accused is entitled under this section is to demand that his case should be tried by another Court. It is left to the Magistrate to decide in the exercise of his discretion whether the case should be committed to the Sessions or transferred to another Magistrate[2] (except in cases exclusively triable by a Sessions Court where the Magistrate would be bound to commit the case to Sessions). In exercising this discretion, the Magistrate will be guided by considerations similar to those which will apply when deciding the question if a case should be tried by himself or should be committed to the Sessions.[3]

Unless the accused on being informed of his right under this section makes his objection to being tried by the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the case, such Magistrate need not transfer the case to any other Magistrate or commit it to the Sessions.[4] In other words, the right of the accused under this section is one that can be waived by him. But where the accused is not informed at all of his right as required by this section, he cannot be held to waive his right merely because he does not object to being tried by the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the case.[5]

The section comes into force only after the accused appears. Where the accused has not appeared at all, an application for transfer of the case would be premature.[6]

3. Objection to commitment to sessions by Magistrate taking cognizance.—The section only entitles the accused to claim that his case should be tried by another Court. He is not entitled to object that the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the case must not hold the preliminary inquiry under Chapter 18 in cases committed to the Sessions.[1]

S. 191, Notes 4—5.

4. Applicability of the provisions to appeals.—It has been held by the Calcutta High Court[1] that a Magistrate who has taken cognizance of an offence under S. 190, Cl. (c) cannot hear an appeal from a conviction in the case (which is tried by another Magistrate) without following the procedure laid down by this section. The reason given is that an appeal is part of the trial for an offence and as such is covered by the section. But the Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view.[2]

5. Effect of non-compliance with section.—Under this section the Magistrate is bound to inform the accused of his right to have the case tried by another Court and if the accused objects to being tried by the Magistrate, the latter is bound to give effect to the objection. Non-compliance with the section in this respect is not a mere irregularity curable under S. 537 but is an illegality and renders the proceedings null and void.[1] Hence it is desirable that a Magistrate should make a note on the record that the provisions of the section were complied with.[2] But the absence of such a note need not necessarily lead to the inference that the provisions of the section were not complied with.[3]

Where the Magistrate who has taken cognizance under Cl. (c) of S. 190 transfers of his own motion, the case to another Magistrate, the proceedings are not open to attack on the ground of non-compliance with the provisions of this section.[4]

S. 191, Note 6.

6. Applicability of section to security proceedings.—This section applies in terms only to cases where cognizance of an offence has been taken. The question has arisen whether the principle of the section applies to security proceedings under Ch. 8 of the Code where there is no question of an offence being taken cognizance of. In other words, the question is: where security proceedings are started against any person on the Magistrate's own knowledge, is it open to him to hear the case and pass final orders therein or should the case be transferred to some other Magistrate to be heard and disposed of by him? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. According to the Calcutta[1] and Patna[2] High Courts, the principle of this section applies in such cases and the case must be transferred for disposal to another Magistrate. The contrary view has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad[3] and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court.[4]

Effect of reference.

Any Magistrate to whom any case is duly referred, by any Magistrate duly empowered to make such reference, may dispose of such case.

Effect of complaint or Police-report.

A complaint or a police-report gives jurisdiction to a competent Magistrate to inquire into or try any offence covered by the facts complained of or reported, and also to try or commit for trial any person who, at the time when the complaint or report is made, or subsequently, appears to have committed the offence disclosed.

CHAPTER XVI.

OF ENQUIRIES AND TRIALS BEFORE THE SUBORDINATE MAGISTRATES.

Reference of cases to Subordinate Magistrate.

273. Criminal cases brought before the Magistrate of the district or a Magistrate in charge of a division of a district, either on complaint preferred directly to such Magistrate or on the report of a Police-officer, may be referred by such Magistrate to any Magistrate subordinate to him. The reference shall be for enquiry or for trial if the offence be triable by such Subordinate Magistrate, or with a view to commitment to the Court of Session if such Magistrate is competent to commit to the Court of Session, or with a view to commitment to the Supreme Court of Judicature if such Subordinate Magistrate is competent to commit to such Supreme Court. Provided that nothing in this section shall prevent any Subordinate Magistrate from entertaining

S. 192, Note 1.

1. Scope of the section.—The section empowers a Chief Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, or a First Class Magistrate specially empowered, to transfer a case from his file to that of a Magistrate subordinate to him. But it is necessary that the following conditions should be fulfilled:—

(1) The Magistrate should first have taken cognizance of the case before he can make an order of transfer.[1]

(2) The transfer should be made to a Magistrate subordinate to him.[2] The section does not authorize a transfer by a Subordinate Magistrate to a superior Magistrate. Where a subordinate Magistrate wants to refer a case to a superior Magistrate for giving enhanced punishment to the accused, he should proceed under S. 349 of the Code.[3]

(3) The transfer to the subordinate Magistrate should be for inquiry or trial, i.e., for disposal by him,[4] and not for mere investigation and report,[5] or for merely considering the report of an investigation which the transferring Magistrate has ordered under S. 202.[6] Where a Magistrate wants to keep a case on his own file and refer it for investigation and report by a subordinate Magistrate, he should proceed under S. 202 of the Code. The provisions of this section and S. 202 are distinct and separate and the powers conferred by one section do not curtail the powers conferred by the other.[7]

either on complaint preferred directly to such Magistrate or on the report of a Police-officer (in cases in which the Subordinate Magistrate is authorized to receive such report), any case that such Magistrate is, by any law for the time being in force, competent to entertain.

(4) The Magistrate to whom the case is transferred should be otherwise competent to inquire and try the case transferred.[8] Jurisdiction and competency which is not otherwise inherent in a Magistrate cannot be conferred merely by virtue of a transfer under the section. Thus proceedings under S. 145 cannot be transferred to a Second or Third Class Magistrate.[9]

2. "Taken cognizance".—As already seen in Note 1, a Magistrate cannot transfer a case under the section unless he has taken cognizance of it. Thus a District Magistrate cannot pass an order for a judicial inquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate in a case taken cognizance of not by himself, but by a Joint Magistrate without withdrawing the case to his own file.[1]

The provisions of S. 190, supra prescribe as to how a Magistrate can take cognizance of a case. He can, for instance, take cognizance of a case upon a complaint preferred to him.[2] The complaint may be in the form of a report submitted by a Subordinate Magistrate.[3] It has been held by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta[4] that a Chief Presidency Magistrate can prefer a complaint to himself against a person for giving false evidence before him, and then transfer the case for inquiry or trial by a Subordinate Magistrate under this section. By virtue of Cl. (c) of S. 190, a case can be taken cognizance of even without a formal complaint, and it is competent for a Magistrate acting under that section to transfer such cases also.[5]

3. Stage at which transfer should be ordered.—All that the section requires is that the Magistrate should have taken cognizance of the case before transferring it. He need not judicially consider the case before making the transfer.[1] Nor, is he bound to examine the complainant on oath where the complaint is in writing. or issue process before transfer.[2] (Vide S. 200). But he can transfer the case at any stage after taking cognizance. Thus, he can transfer a case after framing a charge[2-a] or after issuing processes to the witnesses for the prosecution.[3]

A transfer cannot, however, be ordered under the section by a Magistrate after discharging the accused. Such a procedure is not sanctioned by the Code.[4] Similarly, where after hearing the evidence in the case, the Magistrate finds that an offence triable by a Subordinate Magistrate has been committed, the case should not be transferred on that ground. The Magistrate who undertakes the trial of the case and who also hears the witnesses give their evidence should if possible finish it.[5] Where a part-heard case is however transferred it has been held that the transferee Magistrate should rehear the evidence and frame a fresh charge.[6]

4. Transfer of a transferred case.—A Magistrate has no power to transfer a case which has, itself been transferred to him for disposal under this section by a superior Magistrate. The reason is that the Magistrate cannot, in such a case, be said to have taken cognizance of the case.[1] But the effect of such a transfer is not to render the subsequent proceedings illegal on that ground; the transfer is only irregular and is cured by the provisions of S. 529, Cl. (f) of the Code.[2]

It has been held that where a case has been transferred by an order of the High Court from a Court subordinate to a District Magistrate to that of a District Magistrate, unless a contrary intention is expressed by the High Court, the District Magistrate should himself try the case, and that he has no power to transfer it to another Subordinate Magistrate under this section.[3] But where a case is transferred from the Court of one District Magistrate to another District Magistrate, the transferee Magistrate has, in the absence of any contrary direction by the High Court, power to transfer the case under this section to any Magistrate subordinate to him and who is competent to try the same.[4]

5. Transfer of a case remanded for further inquiry.—Where a case is remanded for further inquiry by a Sessions Judge to a District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate it has been held that the latter has power to transfer the proceedings to a Subordinate Magistrate.[1] Where, however, a case dismissed under S. 203 of the Code was remanded for further proceedings to be held, it was held that the case could not again be transferred under this section.[2]

S. 192, Notes 5—6.

As regards the powers of a District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate to revive a case that has been discharged and then make a transfer see S. 436 and the cases cited below.[3]

6. "Case" meaning of.—

(i) Proceedings under S. 107 of the Code.—The word "case" has been held to be comprehensive enough to include proceedings under S. 107 of the Code, and hence it is open to a District Magistrate who has initiated proceedings under that section to transfer the same to a Subordinate Magistrate who has jurisdiction ordinarily to try such proceedings and who is otherwise qualified to complete the same.[1] Even where a District Magistrate initiates proceedings under sub-S. (2) of S. 107, it has been held that such proceedings can be transferred to a Subordinate Magistrate of the first class who is competent to complete the proceedings although the latter Magistrate is not competent to institute the same himself.[2] Before making an order of transfer it is however essential that the transferring Magistrate should have taken cognizance of the case. Thus where the District Magistrate to whom the Police reported for action under S. 107 without stating his opinion that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace and without issuing the preliminary notice, merely transferred the case to the Head Quarter Magistrate within whose jurisdiction neither the accused resided nor the place where there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace situated, it was held that the District Magistrate had not taken cognizance of the case and the proceedings before the Head Quarter Magistrate were without jurisdiction.[3] Where however a District Magistrate made an order that proceedings were "sanctioned" and sent the same to a Sub-divisional Magistrate, it was held that he had taken cognizance of the case and the transfer was valid.[4]

(ii) Proceedings under S. 110 of the Code.—Proceedings under S. 110 of the Code can also be transferred under this section by a District Magistrate or a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, after taking cognizance of the same, to a Subordinate Magistrate who is otherwise competent to complete the proceedings.[5] A First Class Magistrate specially empowered under sub-S. (2), can also transfer such proceedings.[6] S. 192, Note. 6.

(iii) Enquiry under S. 122 of the Code.—On the question as to whether an enquiry as to the fitness of a surety under S. 122 can be transferred to a Subordinate Magistrate the two Judges who constituted the Bench in the undermentioned case[7] held conflicting views. Cox, J., holding that it can be transferred while Ryves, J., held contra.

(iv) Proceedings under S. 145 of the Code.—Proceedings under S. 145 of the Code can also be transferred under this section as they have been held to be "cases" within the meaning of the section.[8] But a transfer cannot, however, be ordered under the section unless the transferring Magistrate has taken cognizance of the case. Thus, where on an application being made to a District Magistrate praying for action under S. 145, he transferred it to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under him for disposal without taking any action himself under sub-S. (1) of S. 145, and the land concerned was also not within the local jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, it was held that the transfer was not valid.[9] Where, on the other hand, a petition was presented under S. 145 to a City Magistrate and he examined the petitioner on oath, ordered a Police enquiry and on receipt of the Police report came to the conclusion that there was some basis for the complaint and then transferred the complaint to a Subordinate Magistrate, it was held that the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the case and the transfer was valid.[10]

(v) Proceedings under S. 349 of the Code.—Proceedings referred to a superior Magistrate by a Subordinate Magistrate under S. 349 of the Code cannot be transferred under this section.[11]

(vi) Proceedings under S. 552 of the Code.—A complaint under S. 552 of the Code has been held to be not transferrable as that section confers exclusive jurisdiction only to a District or Presidency Magistrate.[12]

Under the Code an act in respect of which a complaint is made under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act is an offence, [Vide S. 4, Cl. (o)] and under S. 260, Cl. transferred stands in the shoes of the original Magistrate and has full authority to deal with the case as if he had taken cognizance of it.[3] An order of transfer does not import any decision on any question either of law or fact arising in the case and it is open to the accused to raise any objection on the ground of jurisdiction, as for instance, the competency of the Court to try him without the sanction of the Local Government where such sanction is required by law.[4]

The transfer of a case taken cognizance of by a Magistrate means the transfer of the judicial investigation into any offence of which the Magistrate has taken cognizance and not merely with reference to some of the accused concerned in the offence. Thus, where a Police charge sheet contained the names of 22 persons as accused but only 9 of them were sent up for trial and the rest were not sent for trial as some of them were absconders, and the Magistrate to whom the charge sheet was submitted transferred the case under this section, it was held that the transfer was with regard to the judicial investigation into the entire offence and not merely with reference to the accused actually sent up for trial. Consequently it was held that the transferring Magistrate had no power to pass any order with regard to the trial of the other 13 accused not sent up for trial.[5] Similarly, where upon a complaint preferred to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate against several persons as accused, the latter examined the complainant but issued summons only against one of the accused and then transferred the complaint to a Subordinate Magistrate under this section, it was held that the whole case against all the accused was transferred and the transferee Magistrate was competent to issue summons against the other accused persons also.[6]

A transfer with directions to commit if the evidence was sufficient and to disallow bail has been held to be erroneous.[7]

9. Erroneous order of transfer—Effect of.—Where a Magistrate not empowered by law to transfer a case under this section, nevertheless makes an order of transfer erroneously in good faith believing that he has power to do so, the transfer is not void but only irregular and the subsequent proceedings are not vitiated on that ground. The irregularity is cured by the provisions of S. 529 of the Code.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872—

Under the Code of 1861, S. 22, the Sessions Judge could delegate cases for trial to the Assistant Sessions Judge in the Presidency of Bombay.

Appointment and powers of Additional and Joint Sessions Judges.

Sessions Judges, who shall exercise all the powers of a Court of Session in one or more Sessions Divisions in which they may be directed to act, but shall try, such cases only as the Local Government directs them to try, or as the Sessions Judge of the division makes over to them for trial.

Appointment and powers of Assistant Sessions Judges.

18. The Local Government may also appoint Assistant Sessions Judges, who shall exercise all the powers of a Court of Session in the Sessions Division to which they may be attached, except the power of hearing appeals, and passing sentences of death, or transportation, or imprisonment for more than seven years; but they shall try those cases only which the Sessions Judge of the Sessions Division makes over to them either by general orders or by a special order:

CHAPTER XIX.

TRIAL BY COURT OF SESSION.

Cognizance of offences by Court of Session.

231. No Court of Session shall take cognizance of any offence, as a Court of original criminal jurisdiction, unless the accused person has been committed by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf, except in the cases referred to in S. 472.

CHAPTER XXV.

TRIALS BEFORE THE COURT OF SESSION.

Cognizance of offences by the Court of Session in original jurisdiction.

359. Except in the cases referred to in S. 172 of this Act, a Court of Session, as a Court of original criminal jurisdiction, shall not take cognizance of any offence but upon a charge preferred by a Magistrate or other officer specially empowered under this Act or under any other law to make commitments to such Court.

S. 193, Notes 1—4.

Under the Code of 1872, S. 18, Assistant Sessions Judges could try only those cases which the Sessions Judge made over to them for trial. Additional Sessions Judges could try cases only as the Local Government directed or as the Sessions Judge made over to them for trial.

Difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882—

There was no material difference between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 in this respect.

Difference between the Codes of 1822 and 1898—

Under the Code of 1898 as it stood before 1923, Additional Sessions Judges could try cases only as the Local Government directed. The Sessions Judge could not make over cases to them for trial.

Amendment in 1923.—The words "or in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges" were omitted with the result that the Sessions Judge could make over cases both to the Assistant as well as Additional Sessions Judges.

2. Object of the section.—The object of the restriction that no Court of Session shall take cognisance of an offence unless the accused has been committed by a Magistrate is twofold:—

firstly.—To secure to the person charged a preliminary enquiry which would afford him the opportunity of being acquainted with the circumstances of the offence imputed to him and enable him to make his defence[1] and secondly.—To prevent the time of the Court of Session from being wasted over cases in which the charge is obviously not supported by such evidence as would justify a conviction.[2]

3. "Except as otherwise expressly provided for".—For instance, see Ss. 480, 437, 478 and 485, infra and the undermentioned case.[1]

4. Commitment by duly empowered Magistrate.—Before a Court of Session can take cognisance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, it is essential that there must be a proper commitment by a competent Magistrate.

(1) There should be a commitment. The absence of a commitment is a defect which affects the jurisdiction or competency of the Sessions Court to take cognisance of the case and cannot be cured by the provisions of S. 537, infra.[1]

(1884) 1884 Pun. Re. No. 42, pp. 94, 95, Mt. Sharina v. Empress (Defect is one of substance and not of form).]

(2) Such commitment must be to a Court of Session having jurisdiction; where the commitment is to a Court without jurisdiction, the commitment must be quashed.[2] S. 193, Notes 4—7

(3) Such commitment must be by a competent Magistrate.[3] But under S. 437, a Court of Session can commit an accused person itself and try him without the intervention of a Magistrate.[4]

For the provisions relating to commitment by Magistrate, see Ss. 206, 347, 437 and 446.

5. Applications in reference and revision if can be transferred to Additional Sessions Judge.—Applications under Chapter 32 of the Code are not cases for trial and cannot be transferred under the provisions of this section.[1]

6. "Such cases"—Sub-S. (2).—Under sub-S. (2) of the section it is only a "case" that can be made over by the Sessions Judge to an Additional or an Assistant Sessions Judge. The Code uses the word "case" as meaning something different from "appeal". (See S. 526). A Sessions Judge therefore cannot transfer an appeal under this section to an Assistant Sessions Judge.[1] Similarly, the sub-section does not enable a Sessions Judge to make over to an Additional Sessions Judge a sentence submitted for confirmation.[1-a] But independently of the provisions of this section, a Sessions Judge can, under S. 409, infra, transfer an appeal to an Additional Sessions Judge. He can also under S. 123, sub-S. 3-B, transfer a proceeding under sub-S. (2) of that section to an Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge. The said sub-section was newly added in 1923 in order to settle the conflict of opinion as to whether such proceedings were "cases" within the meaning of this section.[2]

Codes of 1861 and 1872—

There was no section in these Codes corresponding to the present section.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the provisions of any Letters Patent granted under the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth of Vic. Ch. 104.

(CODES OF 1872 and 1861—Nil.)

Changes made in 1882—

The section was first introduced into the Code of 1882.

Changes made in 1898—

(1) The words 'The Indian High Courts Act 1861' in the second paragraph of sub-S. (1) were substituted for the words 'the 24th and 25th Victoria Ch. 104' which occurred in the Code of 1882.

(2) The words "or any other provisions of this Code" were added.

Subsequent changes—

The words "or the Government of India Act" were inserted by Act XIII of 1916.

2. Cognizance on commitment.—The High Court takes cognizance of a case, not on a complaint or police report or on information as in the case of Magistrates under S. 190, but upon a commitment.[1] In Calcutta and Bombay where the Coroner's Act is in force, an inquisition drawn up by the Coroner has the effect of commitment to the High Court when it has been accepted by the High Court and the officers of the Crown have drawn up a charge in accordance therewith.[2]

3. 'In manner hereinafter provided'.—See Chapter XVIII, infra.

4. Saving of the Letters Patent.—The powers vested in various High Courts under their Letters Patent are not affected by any of the provisions of this section. Thus original criminal jurisdiction is given to the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay by Cl. (22) of their Letters Patents,[1] to the High Court of Patna by Cls. (21) to (23) of its Letters Patent[2] and to the High Court of Lahore by Cls. (15) to (17) of its Letters Patent. This jurisdiction is not therefore affected by this section.

5. "Any other provisions of this Code".—S. 29 of this Code provides that an offence under any law other than the Indian Penal Code, if no Court is mentioned in such law, may be tried by the High Court. And under S. 526 the High Court may transfer any case to itself from any Criminal Court subordinate thereto and try it itself. Under S. 526-A on the application of the Advocate-General the High Court shall order that the case be transferred to it for trial. Or the Governor-General may by notification under S. 527 transfer a case from one High Court to another High Court for trial. And for contempt committed out of Court, the High Court has always got the power to try and punish a person.[1]

6. The Advocate-General may exhibit information.—[Sub-S. (2)]. With the previous sanction of the Local Government the Advocate-General may exhibit information against a person and the High Court can try such a case.

	(1) SUBORDINATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS	5

The Courts of Small Causes in the Presidency-towns shall be deemed to be subordinate to the High Court, and every other Court of Small Causes shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court of Session for the Sessions Division within which such Court is situate.

(CODE OF 1872—Ss. 467-470.)

Prosecution for contempts of the lawful authority of public servants.

467. A complaint of any offence described in Chapter X of the Indian Penal Code, not falling within S. 435 or S. 436, of this Act, shall not be entertained in any Criminal Court, except with the sanction or on the complaint of the public servant concerned, or of his official superior.

The prohibition contained in this section shall not apply to the offences described in Ss. 189 and 190 of the Indian Penal Code.

Prosecution for certain offence against public justice.

468. A complaint of an offence against public justice, described in Ss. 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206; 207, 208, 209, 210, 211 or 228, of the Indian Penal Code, when such offence is committed before or against a Civil or Criminal Court, shall not be entertained in the Criminal Courts, except with the sanction of the Court before or against which the offence was committed, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.

Prosecution for certain offences relating to documents given in evidence.

469. A complaint of an offence relating to documents, described in Ss. 463, 471, 475, or 476, of the Indian Penal Code, when the document has been given in evidence in any proceedings in any Civil or Criminal Court, shall not be entertained against a party to such proceedings, except with the sanction of the Court in which the document was given in evidence, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.

Nature of sanction necessary.

470. The sanction referred to in Ss. 467, 468 and 469, may be expressed in general terms and need not name the accused person.

Such sanction may be given at any time and a sanction under any one of the three last preceding sections shall be deemed sufficient authority for the Court to amend the charge to one of an offence coming within either of the two remaining sections, if the facts disclose such offence.

Explanation:—In cases under this chapter, the report or application of the public servant or Court shall be deemed sufficient complaint.

(CODE OF 1861—Ss. 168, 169, 170.)

Prosecution for certain offences under Chapter X of the Penal Code not to be instituted, but with the sanction of the public servants concerned.

168. A charge of a contempt of the lawful authority of any Court or public servant, or of any other offence against a public servant as such, described in Chapter X of the Indian Penal Code, not falling within S. 163 of this Act, shall not be entertained in any Criminal Court, except with the sanction or on the complaint of the Court or public servant concerned, or, if such servant is an inferior ministerial servant, with the sanction or on the complaint of his official superior. The prohibition contained in this section shall not apply to the offence described in Ss. 189 and 190 of the Indian Penal Code.

1. Legislative Changes in 1923.—The following changes were introduced by the Amending Act XVIII of 1923:—

(1) Sanction abolished.—The words "with the previous sanction" which occurred in the Code before the amendments of 1923 before the words "on complaint in writing" in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of sub-S. (1) have been omitted. Prior to the amendment of 1923, prosecutions in respect of offences mentioned in the section could be launched either upon the complaint of, or upon sanction granted to, a private person by the Court or the public servant concerned. The effect of a sanction was that the responsibility of the prosecution rested upon the private person to whom it was granted.[1] The sanction so granted was often utilised against the opponent as a weapon of extortion and blackmail and for the gratification of private ends, and with that object in view persons obtaining the sanction usually resorted to dilatory tactics in conducting the prosecution with the result that in some cases at least there was no vindication of public justice, and thus the very object of the grant of sanction was frustrated.[2] The Legislature with a view to remedy this evil, has abolished the grant of sanction to private persons altogether, thereby doing away with the agency of a private prosecution. Under the Code as amended, the responsibility of a prosecution rests with the Court or the public servant, without whose complaint in writing the Criminal Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences referred to in the section.[3]

(2) Sub-Ss. (4), (5) and (6) have been omitted in consequence of the abolition of sanction. The undermentioned cases which related to the procedure and form of sanction[4] are now no longer law and are only of academic interest.

2. Amending Act 18 of 1923, how far retrospective.—The amending Act came into force on the 1st of September, 1923, since which date sanction has been abolished. But does the amendment affect retrospectively the validity of a sanction granted prior to it? The answer to this question depends upon whether or not a prosecution has been launched on the basis of such sanction prior to the amendment. Where a complaint filed on the basis of a sanction has been taken cognizance of by the Court even prior to the amendment, the legality of the complaint is not affected by the amendment, nor is the subsequent trial barred under the present Code. The reason is that the Court being properly seised of the case nothing short of a specific withdrawal of the jurisdiction of the Court to try the offences can affect its authority to go on with the trial according to law.[1] In such a case, however, the accused person has a right to apply for the revocation of the sanction to the superior Court under the repealed sub-S. (6) and the superior Court is competent to revoke the sanction and withdraw the prosecution even after the amendment. The right to apply for such revocation is "a real right to invoke the aid of a higher tribunal" and being a statutory substantive right of an aggrieved person is not affected by the amendment having regard to the provisions of S. 6 of the General Clauses Act.[2] Where, however, sanction has merely been granted prior to the amendment but no prosecution has been launched on the basis of such sanction, the provisions of the present Code would apply to the case, and no complaint can be filed in pursuance thereof by the private person to whom it was granted. The reason is the grant of sanction does not give any vested right to the person to whom it is granted but is merely a part of the processual law, being only one method of setting the criminal law in motion and it is a fundamental principle that rules of procedure are always retrospective in operation.[3] On the same principle, it has been held that the pendency of an application in the trial Court for sanction on the date of the amendment does not give any right to the person applying for it to have the sanction granted after the amendment.[4] The proper remedy in such a case would be to move the Court under S. 476 or S. 476-A of the Code for making a complaint.[5]

Where on the date of the amendment an application for sanction is pending before the superior Court under the old sub-S. (6), the subordinate Court having refused to grant sanction, there is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether the superior Court can exercise its power to grant sanction after the amendment. The High Court of Allahabad[6] has held that the right to apply under sub-S. (6) is a right given by law which remains unaffected by the amendment by virtue of S. 6, Cl. (e) of the General Clauses Act, and that therefore the superior Court can grant sanction. The High Court of Madras[7] has taken a contrary view and held that the superior Court cannot grant sanction after the amendment. But the question as to the power of the superior Court to grant sanction under sub-S. (6) is now only of academic importance because, even assuming that it has the power, such sanction if granted after the amendment would be futile and ineffective as no valid prosecution can be launched in pursuance thereof under the present Code.[8] This aspect has not been considered by the Allahabad High Court and in this view, it is submitted, that the Madras decision is correct in principle.

3. Scope and object of the section.—As a general rule, any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence may set the law in motion by a complaint even though he is not a person interested in, or affected by, the offence. To this general rule this section provides an exception, for it forbids cognizance being taken of the offences referred to therein except where there is a complaint in writing by the Court or by the public servant concerned.[1] The object of the section is to prevent improper or reckless prosecutions by private persons of offences in connection with the administration of public justice and of the contempt of lawful authority of a public servant.[2] It is aimed at giving protection to parties and witnesses, against vexatious or frivolous prosecutions for their resorting to Courts and giving evidence therein, and such protection is afforded by prescribing the necessity of a complaint by the Court in or in relation to whose proceedings the offence is alleged to have been committed.[3]

The provisions of this section are mandatory and the Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of any of the offences mentioned therein unless there is a complaint in writing as required by the section.[4] It has been held that where the complaint is not in confirmity with the provisions of this section the Court has no power even to examine the complainant on oath because such examination could be made only where the Court has taken cognizance of the case.[5] The absence of a complaint as required by the section is fatal to the

The section, being one in the nature of a prohibition to Courts to take cognizance of offences, should be construed strictly. It applies only to the offences mentioned therein and not to any other offences.[9] But it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore the provisions of the section by the device of instituting the case under another section of the Penal Code to which this section does not apply, and then convict the accused of the offence prohibited under this section with the aid of S. 238 of the Code without the requisite complaint. The provisions of S. 238 must yield in such a case to this section.[10] Nor can the provisions of this section be avoided by reducing a charge in respect of the offence mentioned in the section to some other offence and thus avoid the necessity of a complaint by the Court or the public servant.[11] Where the facts disclosed by a complaint are sufficient to constitute any of the offences mentioned in the section such a complaint cannot be taken cognizance of unless it is in conformity with the section.[12] Thus where the facts stated in a complaint amount to an offence under S. 193, I.P.C. to which sub-S. (1) (b) would apply, no Court can take cognizance of it otherwise than in the manner prescribed in the section; and it makes no difference that the complainant, evidently with a view to evade the section, has elected to name the offence as forgery to which sub-S. (1) (c) does not apply because the offender is not a party to the proceeding in Court. In such a case it has been held that the specific offence of fabricating false evidence should be given preference to the more general charge of forgery.[13] Where however a complainant combines a complaint of an offence to which the section applies with a complaint of an offence to which the section does not apply, the Court must investigate the latter complaint but refuse to investigate the former if it is not in accordance with the section.[14]

S. 195, Notes 3—4.

This section creates a bar and says that unless some requirements are complied with cognizance should not be taken of any of the offences mentioned therein; S. 476 of the Code enacts the procedure to be followed for removing the bar.[15] It prescribes the proceedure to be followed by the Court in making a complaint; the two sections should be read together.[16] Proceedings by a Court under S. 476 are taken only in the interests of justice when the Court thinks fit, and although it is open to a private person to move the Court under that section it is for the Court to decide to take action and institute the prosecution.[17]

4. Offences concerning public servants, Sub-S. (1), Cl. (a).—In respect of the offences mentioned in Cl. (a) of sub-S. (1), it is the public servant concerned or some other authority to which he is subordinate that is competent to make a complaint.[1] A complaint by a private person in respect of any of the offences is barred;[2] nor can the Court take cognizance of any such offence suo motu.[3] The word "concerned" means concerned in the offence. Thus in the case of an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, the complaint that is necessary is that of the public servant to whom the false information was given, and not that of the public servant sought to be injured by such information.[4] Where an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, is alleged to have been committed in respect of a letter written to the Collector of the District, the Sub-divisional Magistrate who is not concerned in the offence is not competent to prefer a complaint.[5] Similarly, where a complaint is filed before the Sub-divisional Magistrate, the Sub-Inspector of Police to whom the complaint is sent by the Magistrate for enquiry and report cannot make a complaint under S. 182, Penal Code.[6] In the case of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code, the complaint that is necessary is that of the public servant whose order has been disobeyed.[7]

Where no public servant is concerned in the offence the clause does not apply.[8] Thus where false information is not given to a public servant, neither S. 182, Penal Code, nor this section applies to the case.[9] Similarly where an order for the disobedience of which a prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, was launched was not promulgated by any public servant but by the Government;

it was held that the section did not apply to the case and that the Chairman of a Municipality who merely republished the order in his limits could not be said to have promulgated the order so as to require his complaint.[10]

Public Servant—Meaning of.—The term public servant has not been defined in the Code. It has, however, been defined in S. 21 of the Penal Code, which by virtue of S. 4, sub-S. (2), ante, applies to this Code. See also S. 197, infra.

The following have been held to be public servants in connection with the offences mentioned in this clause:—

(1) A peon of a Court of Justice whose duty is to execute any judicial process.[11]

(2) The Collector acting in management of a Khas Mahal and a surveyor employed by him in such department.[12]

(3) A Municipal sanitary inspector.[13]

The following have been held not to be public servants:—

(1) A person nominated by the Collector under S. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for making a division of the crops between the landlord and the tenant.[14]

(2) A Local Board Sircar.[15]

(3) A Municipal water-tax collector.[16]

The public servant may also be the presiding officer of a Court. Thus, a District Judge to whom false information is given in respect of an insolvency proceeding pending before him, can make a complaint in his capacity as public servant.[17] In such a case the public servant though he is the presiding officer of a Court does not exercise any quasi judicial function but acts only as an ordinary public servant.[18]

5. Subordination of public servants.—The subordination of one public servant to another may arise either from express enactment or from the fact that both belong to the same department one being superior in rank to another.[1] The following have been held to be subordinate to the authority mentioned:—

(1) Police officers of the District including the District Superintendent of Police, have been generally held to be subordinate to the District Magistrate having regard to the provisions of S. (4) of

(4) A process-server in Central Provinces is subordinate to a Nazir, District Judge, or the Judicial Commissioner, but not to a Subordinate Judge or Additional Judicial Commissioner.[6]

(5) A Commissioner appointed by the Court to examine accounts is a public servant subordinate to the Court appointing him and the Court can make a complaint against a person refusing to take oath and answer the questions put by the commissioner, for an offence under S. 179, I.P.Code.[7]

(9) A Sub-Deputy Collector deputed by a Sub-Divisional Officer to make a local inquiry into an objection as to the preparation of an electoral roll is subordinate to the latter officer.[11]

The following public servants have been held not to be subordinate to the authority mentioned:—

(1) Assistant Superintendent is not subordinate to the District Superintendent of Police.[12]

(2) A Police Head-Constable is not subordinate to the Sub-Inspector of Police.[13]

6. Complaint in cases of offences mentioned in Cl. (a).—

(1) Offence under S. 182, Penal Code.—Where a complaint or information lodged with the Police is found to be false but before the Police report of the investigation the complaint or information is repeated before the Court either in the form of a complaint,[1] or in the form of a petition impugning the Police investigation and asking for an inquiry by the Court which also amounts to a complaint in law,[2] a prosecution under S. 182, Penal Code, should not be launched before the complaint is judicially disposed of by the Court. After the complaint is judicially disposed of, there is no bar to a complaint by the Police for the offence of giving false information to the Police.[3] The High Court of Rangoon[4] has, however, held that, in such a case the complaint of the Court which disposed of the subsequent complaint is necessary. This last mentioned view is, it is submitted, not in consonance with the provisions of sub-S. (1) (a).

Where a person is charged by the Police for an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, and, in answer to that charge, he files what is familiarly called Narazi petition impugning the result of the Police investigation and asking for an inquiry into the truth of his original information to the Police, is it necessary that such petition should be disposed of and the accused person be given an opportunity to prove his case before proceeding with the trial for an offence under S. 182, Penal Code? It has been held that where the objection is taken and pressed before trial, he can be given an opportunity to prove his case and the High Court has interfered in the early stages of the trial (i.e., before the conviction) and quashed the proceedings on the ground of omission to give such opportunity.[5] But after trial and conviction for the offence under S. 182, Penal Code, the trial will not be considered to be vitiated on the ground of failure to give such an opportunity. The reason is that the Court having properly taken cognizance of the complaint under S. 182, it has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial, and the accused cannot be said to be prejudiced by such omission as he has ample opportunity to prove the truth of his information in defence.[6]

A complaint under S. 182, Penal Code, should not be made in the absence of anything to show that the information given by the accused is false to his knowledge, in other words intentionally false.[7] Thus, a complaint ought not to be made on the basis of statements made in a petition presented to the Court under S. 144, sub-S. (4), which the petitioner later on failed to substantiate[8] or in respect of statements made in answer to questions put by the Magistrate during an examination on oath.[9]

(2) Offence under S. 188, Penal Code.—The requirement of this section as to the necessity of a complaint in the case of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code, is not superseded or dispensed with by the provisions of S. 11 of the Prevention of Intimidation Ordinance, V of 1930, the notification under which makes the offence under S. 188, cognizable and non-bailable.[10]

A prosecution under this section should not be launched unless the necessary elements prescribed for the offence are present.[11] Thus where an order under S. 144 of the Code is ultra vires, no prosecution should be launched.[12]

(3) Offence under S. 174, Penal Code.—In the case cited below[13] it was held that where a commissioner appointed by the Court did not give sufficient time to the alleged offender to appear before him, the order for prosecution was improper.

S. (1) of this section had to obtain the sanction of the Court where such offence was committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in such Court.[1-a] The Court itself could also under S. 476 of the Code, without any application by any party, make a complaint in respect of such offence when it was committed before, or brought to the notice of the Court in the course of a judicial proceedings before such Court.[1] S. 195, Note 7.

Under the present Code both under this section and S. 476 the complaint can only be by a Court in respect of such offence, when it is committed in or in relation to any proceeding before such Court. Thus the proceeding need not be a judicial one[2] provided it is that of a Court. An officer who has been appointed as a Court and has also an executive capacity, and also acts in his executive capacity is not a "Court" at all and this section or S. 476 does not apply to an offence committed in, or in relation to, a proceeding before him in such capacity.[3]

The following have been held to be proceedings in Court within the meaning of this section and of S. 476:—

(1) Proceedings in execution of a decree.[4]

(2) Proceedings under S. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.[5]

(3) Further evidence taken by a Subordinate Court in a case remitted by the appellate Court.[6]

(4) Proceedings before an arbitrator appointed in a pending suit.[7]

(5) Proceedings directing the return of the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.[8]

(6) A Magistrate acting under S. 350 of the Code.[9]

(7) A Sessions Judge making an inquiry into the conduct of the jury during the progress of a trial upon certain allegations made against the jury.[10]

Where there are no proceedings in Court, the provisions of Cls. (b) and (c) do not apply. Thus the clause does not apply to the offence of giving false evidence before a Police-officer[11] or the fabrication of evidence merely for the purpose of influencing a police investigation[12] where there are no proceedings in Court. But where the offence is committed in a proceeding in Court, the fact that it is brought to the notice of the Court in a subsequent stage of the proceeding or in a different proceeding does not affect the applicability of the clause to the offence. Thus, where the offence of perjury is committed at the time of passing an ex parte decree in a suit, the Court trying the suit after setting aside the ex parte decree is competent to order his prosecution.[13] Similarly where in support of an application for adjournment in a suit before the Munsif a particular statement was made by the plaintiff and after the dismissal of the application it was verified by the Munsif that the statement was false, it was held that the Munsif was competent to complain for perjury as the offence was committed in, or in relation to, the proceeding of the Court.[14]

Where the offence is committed in a proceeding in Court it is not necessary that the Court should have tried the proceedings on the merits. Thus, where the Court merely passes a decree on the statement upon oath by a referee in pursuance of the agreement of the parties to abide by his statement[15] or simply passes a decree on the basis of an award by an arbitrator,[16] it has been held that the complaint of the Court is necessary with reference to an offence committed in the proceeding in Court.

8. "In relation to any proceeding".—To attract the applicability of Cl. (b) an offence if not alleged to be committed in a proceeding in Court must at least be in relation to the proceeding in Court. In order to appreciate properly whether and when an offence can be considered to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in Court, regard must be had to the various stages when an offence can be committed with reference to a proceeding in Court. An offence may be committed either (a) prior to a proceeding in Court or (b) subsequent to the termination of the proceeding in Court or (c) committed during the pendency of the proceeding in Court. Where an offence is committed prior to the commencement of proceedings in Court, can it be said that it is not committed in relation to the subsequent proceedings simply because the proceedings are not pending on the date of the commission of the offence? The High Court of Bombay in the cases mentioned below[1] held that proceedings in Court should be pending on the date of the offence and that otherwise Cl. (b) did not apply. But this view has not been followed even by that High Court in later decisions; the crucial date for the purpose of determining the applicability of the clause, according to these decisions, is not the date of the commission of the offence mentioned in the clause, but the date on which the criminal Court is invited to take cognizance of the offence.[2] Where on such date, no proceedings have been started in Court but merely contemplated, the clause does not apply. It cannot be said with certainty in such a case as to which is the Court in which the proceedings are contemplated, and a Court cannot be called upon to give a complaint with reference to a supposed prospective proceeding. Thus, where A files a complaint to a Magistrate alleging that B has fabricated false accounts for the purpose of filing false suits in Court but no suits are actually filed on the date of the complaint, this section does not apply.[3] The fact that subsequent to the entertainment of the complaint the accused files a suit in the Civil Court will not deprive the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court to try the complaint in accordance with law.[3-a] Where however on the date when the Criminal Court takes cognizance of a complaint, proceedings with reference to the offence disclosed therein, have been started in another Court, then Cl. (b) applies and the complaint of the latter Court is necessary although the proceedings in Court are subsequent to the commission of the offence. On such date the proceedings may be pending or disposed of in that Court and in either case the clause applies. The mere fact that the proceedings in the Court are withdrawn by the parties without being heard by the Court is no ground for holding that the clause does not apply.[4] Thus, where a person charges another before the police accusing him of theft and the police put up the accused for trial before the Court of Session which tries and finds the case to be false, a subsequent complaint under S. 211, Penal Code, cannot be entertained unless it is by the Court of Session or by the Court to which it is subordinate.[5] Similarly, a statement recorded under S. 164 of the Code,[6] or a statement made in the enquiry before a committing Magistrate[7] are all statements made in relation to the trial in the Court of Session, and therefore it is that Court that is competent to make a complaint for perjury. The complaint of the committing Magistrate was held to be not necessary in the above cases.

Where the offence itself is committed after the termination of the proceedings in Court, it cannot ordinarily be said to have been committed in relation to the previous proceeding. It is indispensable under Cl. (b) that the offence must have in some manner affected the proceedings in Court or designed to affect them or come to light in the course of such proceedings, and an offence committed long after the termination of the proceedings is outside the scope of the clause.[8] Thus, where a judgment-debtor's application for certifying a certain payment alleged to be made to the decree-holder but not admitted by the latter in his petition for execution, is dismissed as time-barred, it has been held that the executing Court has no jurisdiction to take notice of a receipt produced by the judgment-debtor subsequent to the dismissal of the application, and order a prosecution under Ss. 209 and 210, Penal Code.[9]

As already seen in the previous Note, an offence, if committed in a proceeding in Court, requires the complaint of the Court. But where the offence is committed during the pendency of the proceeding in Court but outside Court, it is necessary that the offence should be committed in relation to the proceeding in Court, for, otherwise the section does not apply. Thus, where in a trial in a Court of Session, a document is exhibited on behalf of the defence but the executant of the document is neither a party nor a witness in the case, nor is there anything to suggest that he intended to use that document in Court, it has been held that the section does not apply and the Court cannot order his prosecution for perjury or forgery.[10]

An offence committed in the trial Court is committed in relation to the proceeding of the Appellate Court.[11] Even otherwise the section authorises the Appellate Court as the Court to which the trial Court is subordinate to make a complaint. As to when the Appellate Court can make a complaint, see S. 476-A.

S. 195, Note 9.

9. Offence under S. 211, Penal Code, when committed in relation to proceeding in Court.—An offence under S. 211, Penal Code, consists of laying a false charge with the police as well as of instituting proceedings in Court with the necessary intention mentioned in the section. But sub-S. (1) Cl. (b) applies only where the offence is committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court.

(1) Where there is only a charge of complaint to the police but there are no further proceedings in Court, then Cl. (b) does not apply.[1]—The police can in such case complain under S. 211, Penal Code.[2] The fact that subsequent to the institution of the prosecution by the police, the accused repeats his charge to the police before a Magistrate, cannot make the provisions of this section applicable so as to require the complaint of the Magistrate. The reason is that the Court having properly taken cognizance of the complaint by the police under S. 211, Penal Code, nothing that happens subsequently can deprive the Court of its jurisdiction to proceed with the complaint in accordance with law.[3] The contrary view which appears to have been taken by the High Court of Calcutta[4] is, it is submitted, not correct in principle.

Where a person charges several persons before the police, but the police put up for trial before the Court only some of them, is the complaint of the Court necessary for prosecuting the complainants under section 211, Penal Code, in respect of the other persons not sent up for trial? Upon this point there is a conflict of judicial opinion. In Hardwar Pal v. Emperor[5] the High Court of Allahabad has held that the offence is committed in relation to the proceeding in Court although all the offenders concerned in the offence are not parties to such proceeding and therefore the complaint of the Court trying the offence is necessary. This view has however been doubted in a later decision of the same High Court.[6] A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras,[7] and the High Court of Lahore,[8] have, on the other hand, held that the complaint of the Court is not necessary in such a case. The reasoning advanced for the latter view is that the fact that the trial is the result of the complaint does not ipso facto bring all matters mentioned in it in relation to the charge tried at the trial.

(2) Where a complaint preferred to the police is investigated and brought to the notice of the Magistrate by the police who report it to be false, under S. 173 of the Code, Cl. (b) does not apply.[9] —Where the police find on investigation that an information or complaint made to it is false and bring it to the notice of the Magistrate, who thereupon orders the police to stop further investigation,[10] or to remove the case from file,[11] or, makes an enquiry into the truth of the police-report either himself or through another Magistrate[12] it has been held that it is not necessary that the complaint under S. 211, need be filed only by the Magistrate under Cl. (b). The reason is that it cannot be said in such a case that complainant intended to commit or has committed the offence in relation to any proceeding in Court.

In the case cited below[13] the High Court of Patna has held that where the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence (in respect of which a complaint was preferred to the police) upon a police-report he should not order the prosecution of the complainant under S. 211, Penal Code, without giving him an opportunity to substantiate the charge. But an objection on the ground of failure to give such an opportunity should be taken before trial; after trial, the conviction will not be considered to be vitiated on that ground.[14] The reason is the accused person has ample opportunity of proving his original charge in his defence.

(3) Where a person complains to the police but also repeats the complaint in Court before the police take action under S. 211, Penal Code, Cl. (b) applies.[15]—The repetition of complaint to the Court may be in the form of an original complaint or in the shape of a petition impugning the result of the police investigation and asking for an inquiry, which in law amounts to a complaint. In either case Cl. (b) applies and a prosecution under S. 211, cannot be instituted without the complaint of the Court.[16] No complaint should, however, be made without disposing of the complaint of the person charged, in accordance with law[17] and giving him an opportunity to substantiate the complaint.[18]

S. 195, Note 9.

Where a complaint made to the police is repeated before the Court, then, according to the High Court of Allahabad[19] and the Chief Court of Rangoon,[20] there is no bar to a prosecution for giving false information to the police under S. 182, Penal Code or for laying a false charge before the police. The High Court of Madras[21], and Bombay,[22] have, however, held that in such a case the prosecution should be for the graver offence under S. 211, Penal Code, and that complaint under S. 182 alone witnesses of the complainant; it is competent to dismiss the complaint under S. 203 of the Code.[28]

S. 195, Notes 9—12.

10. Offences under Cl. (b)—Whether the offender should be a party to the proceeding in Court.—Unlike Cl. (c) of sub-S. (1), Cl. (b) does not require that the offender should be a party to the proceeding in Court. Provided the offence is committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, Cl. (b) will apply although the offender is not himself a party to the proceeding. Thus a complaint of the Court is necessary for the prosecution of a person who is alleged to have caused or instigated the filing of a false complaint in Court.[1]

11. Offences committed by a party to a proceeding in respect of a document produced or given in evidence—sub-S. (1), Cl. (c).—With regard to the offences mentioned in Cl. (c) of sub-S. (1), the following conditions are necessary for the applicability of the section:—

(1) the offence mentioned should be committed by a party to the proceeding in Court;

(2) such offence should be in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding.

It is essential that both the conditions should be satisfied. Thus where a document alleged to be forged is produced into Court, but the offender is not a party to the proceeding in Court, the provisions of the section do not apply.[1]

See also Note 12, infra.

12. "By a party to any proceeding in Court".—As has been seen in Note 11, supra, where any of the offences mentioned in Cl. (c) is committed by a person who is not a party to a proceeding in Court, the section does not apply and the complaint of the Court is not necessary for taking cognizance of the offence.[1] Thus where the offence is committed by a witness,[2] or the recognised agent of the party as for instance the pleader of the party,[3] or by a receiver appointed by the Court,[4] the provisions of the section do not apply. Similarly, where the offender is not a party to the proceeding but abets the commission of the offence by the party[5] as for instance by being an attestor or writer of a document alleged to be forged,[6] no complaint of the Court is necessary.

Where the offence mentioned in Cl. (c) is committed by several persons but only one of them is a party to the proceeding in Court, is a complaint of the Court necessary for taking cognizance of the offence against the other offenders who are not parties to the proceeding? The answer to this question depends primarily upon the construction to be placed upon the term 'offence' in sub-S. (1) (c) whether it denotes the transaction of the offence as a whole so that the Court is debarred from taking cognizance of the transaction including the shares taken in it by non-parties as well as parties, or whether it refers only to the share taken in the transaction by the party so that the power to proceed against non-parties is not affected by the section. The High Court of Bombay[7] has adopted the former construction, and held that it is the cognizance of the offence as a whole and not a particular offender's offence that is prohibited by the section. There is however a consensus of judicial opinion practically among all the other High Courts[8] favouring the latter construction; and they have held that there is no bar to the Court taking cognizance of the offence against non-parties otherwise than in the matter prescribed by this section.

It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad[9] that in order that this clause may apply, the offence should have been committed by a party as such to the proceeding, in other words that the section does not apply where the offence has been committed prior to the offender becoming a party to the proceeding in Court. The High Court of Bombay[10] has also held that Cl. (c) does not apply to a case where there is an user of a forged document outside Court prior to its production in Court. The High Courts of Calcutta,[11] Lahore,[12] Madras,[13] Rangoon[14] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[15] have all, on the other hand, taken a contrary view and held that the clause applies also to a case where the commission of the offence is anterior to the offender becoming a party to a proceeding in Court. According to the last mentioned view the proper test to be applied for the purpose of determining the applicability of the clause is to see whether the offender is or has been a party to a proceeding in any Court not on the date of the commission of the offence but on the date when the Criminal Court is invited to take cognizance of the offence. S. 195, Note 1

The foregoing discussion leads to the further question as to whether a complaint of the Court is necessary where the offence has been committed subsequent to the termination of the proceedings in Court in which the offender has been a party. It has been held that the clause does not apply to such a case.[16] The reason is that the offence committed after the termination of the proceedings cannot be considered to have, in any manner, affected the prior proceedings or in any way designed to affect them or come to light in the course of the proceedings, and this clause read with S. 476, shows that the Court has no power to make a complaint unless the offence is committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court. Thus where a document which is in the custody of the Court is alleged to be forged after the termination of the proceedings in which it was filed, it has been held that a complaint can neither be given nor is necessary. The fact that the document has been in the custody of the Court merely imposes upon the presiding officer as the executive head of his establishment certain responsibilities which are different from that of a Court acting judicially.[17]

Party to the proceeding—Meaning of.—A complainant in a criminal case being a prosecutor has been held to be a party to the proceeding in Court, and a complaint of the Court disposing of the case is necessary for prosecuting him for the offence of forgery under S. 471, I.P.Code.[18] A claimant, who files a claim in insolvency before the Official Assignee is a party to the insolvency proceedings, and the complaint of the Insolvency Court is necessary for taking cognizance of any of the offences referred to in the section.[19] A complaint by the Official Assignee is not enough.[20]

13. "In respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such a proceeding".—Where the document in respect of which the offence is committed is not produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in Court, Cl. (c) does not apply.[1] The production of a document is not the same thing as giving it in evidence. The word "or" between the words "produced" and "given in evidence" in the section shows that the two things are disjunctive.[2] The term "produced" has been held to mean produced for the purpose of being tendered in evidence or for some other purpose.[3] Thus, where a document is handed over to the Judge by the party but the Judge returns it without taking it on the file,[4] or rejects it as being inadmissible in evidence owing to want of stamp or registration,[5] it has been held that the document is produced within the meaning of the section. Similarly where a document is sent for from the file of another Court and used by the pleader in arguments and referred to in the judgment, Cl. (c) applies to the case.[6]

It is enough for fulfilling the requirements of the section that the document is produced in Court. It is not necessary that the document should be considered or acted upon by the Court.[7] Thus, where a document is produced before an arbitrator in a reference made in a pending suit and the document is filed in Court by the arbitrator along with the award and thus becomes part of the Court records, the document is produced within the meaning of the section although it is not considered by the Court.[8] So also where a forged document is used in an enquiry by a Police-officer under S. 202 of the Code, the production of the document has been held to be in or in relation to the proceeding of the Magistrate who has directed the enquiry.[9]

To attract the applicability of Cl. (c) is it necessary that the document should be actually put into Court or is it enough if it is relied upon and offered to be produced into Court by a party? A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras[10] has held that where a document alleged to be forged is simply mentioned in the affidavit as to documents but not actually put into Court, the provisions of this clause do not apply notwithstanding the further fact that the document has been inspected by the opposite party and has even been filed in the court translator's office for translation in accordance with Rules. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur[11] has, on the other hand, held that although a document has not been actually produced in Court because of its custody with the Registrar but is relied upon in the list of documents filed by the party, and the Court has also called for its production from the Registrar, that Cl. (c) applies to the case. S. 195, Note 13.

The section refers to a document produced or given in evidence, but does not say whether the original or copy of the document should be produced or given in evidence. Upon this point, the Chief Court of Oudh[12] has held that the production contemplated is that of the original and not a copy of the document, the reason being that the Court before which a copy is produced is not really in a position to express any opinion as to the genuineness of the original and a literal construction of the section also requires the production of the original. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind[13] has on the other hand held that the production of a certified copy of a forged document in Court is user of the forged original punishable under S. 471, Penal Code.

Where the offence referred to in Cl. (c) is committed by a party to a proceeding in Court, and the document is produced or given in evidence in the proceeding, is it also necessary under the section that such production should have been by the party? The High Court of Bombay[14] has held that Cl. (c) applies to documents produced in Court whether by the party who is alleged to have committed the offence or by any one else. The High Court of Patna[15] has, however, held in a case where a document produced before a Police-officer is filed by that officer in Court along with his report in proceedings under S. 145 of the Code and the party filing it subsequently withdrew from the proceedings in Court, that the document has not been produced within the meaning of the section and even if it is produced the offender not being a party to its production the section has no application.

The production or giving in evidence of the document should be before the Court takes cognizance of any of the offences referred to in the section. Where the Criminal Court has taken cognizance of an offence, e.g., forgery, the production of the document (alleged to be forged) subsequent thereto in a Civil Court will not make the section applicable so as to necessitate a complaint of the Civil Court; otherwise it will be open to the accused in every case to defeat the prosecution by instituting a suit and producing the document in such suit.[16] On the same principle it has been held that where the document is produced before the committing Magistrate by the accused in a prosecution relating to the document under S. 218, Penal Code, the complaint of the Magistrate is not necessary for trying the accused in the Court of Session on a charge of forgery under S. 465, Penal Code, in respect of the same document.[17]

Where a document alleged to be forged is not produced by a party in the civil suit filed on the basis of such document because the suit has been withdrawn, the subsequent production of the document as per order of the Court in a proceeding started after the disposal of the suit on an application for ordering a prosecution cannot be regarded as produced within the meaning of the section; it has been observed that the term "produced or given in evidence" could only mean "tendered or admitted" in the course of the civil proceedings which ended with their withdrawal.[18] Where, however, the proceedings are pending, and a document alleged to be forged is produced in the proceedings though only as an annexure to a report by a guardian, the clause applies. The proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act continue until the minor attains majority and do not terminate on the appointment of a guardian by the Court.[19] 14. In any proceeding".—See Note 7, ante.

15. "Of any offence described in S. 463"—Cl. (e).—The words 'any offence described in S. 463, 'Penal Code,' mean all forms of forgery described therein though they may be punishable under different sections of the Code. Thus, Cl. (c) will apply to an offence under Ss. 466,[1] 467[2] and 468[3] of the Penal Code, as they are all offences described in S. 463. But it does not apply to an offence under S. 474 as it is not an offence described in S. 463.[4]

16. Who can make a complaint under Cls. (b) and (c).—It is only the Court in or in relation to whose proceedings the offence is committed, or the Court to which such Court is subordinate within the meaning of sub-S. (3) that is competent to make a complaint in respect of the offences mentioned in Cls. (b) and (c). No other Court can complain.[1] Thus, a District Magistrate cannot make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before a first class Magistrate,[2] or before an Assistant Collector trying a suit for profits under the Tenancy Act.[3] Even where the same officer is functioning in two different capacities, as for instance a District Judge also exercising the powers of a District Registrar, the District Judge cannot, in his capacity as Judge, make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before him in his capacity as Registrar.[4]

S. 195. Note 16.

The complaint should be filed by the Court, i.e., the presiding judge of the Court, and not by any other subordinate officer of the Court. Thus, where the offence is committed before a Deputy Magistrate who has been appointed as commissioner by the Court of Session, it is the latter Court that is competent to complain.[5] Similarly, in respect of an offence committed before an Official Assignee, the Insolvency Court should make the complaint.[6] In the case cited below[7] a money decree passed by a Subordinate Judge was sent to the Collector for execution under S. 68 of the Civil Procedure Code and the sale was fixed to be held before the Mamlatdar. The judgment-debtor applied to the Mamlatdar for an adjournment of the sale alleging satisfaction of the decree and produced a receipt in support thereof which was impugned as being forged. It was held that the Mamlatdar acted only as the agent of the Subordinate Judge and not as a Court, and that the complaint should be given by the Subordinate Judge.

But the Court continues the same nothwithstanding a change of officers presiding therein and consequently a successor in office is competent to make a complaint in respect of the offence committed before his predecessor.[8] He is also competent to continue the proceedings for making a complaint under S. 476 which have been started by the predecessor[9]. The presiding Judge cannot however, after he ceases to hold the office, make a complaint as he is no longer the Judge of the Court.[10] Where, however the Court before which the offence was committed was abolished but reinstated with modifications in the territorial jurisdiction two years later, it was held that there was no such continuity as to make the Court reinstated the same as the one that ceased to exist.[11] Similarly, where the offence of perjury had been committed before the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad but subsequently a portion of the territory subject to his jurisdiction was transferred to the newly constituted Sessions Judge of Kaira, it was held that the Judge of Kaira, though having territorial jurisdiction over the person accused of perjury, had no power to make a complaint regarding the offence committed before the Judge of Ahmedabad.[12] In the undermentioned case[13] where the perjury was alleged to be committed before a First Class Magistrate and pending proceedings for prosecution of the offender under S. 476 he was transferred and was succeeded by a Magistrate with second class powers, it was held that the District Magistrate was competent to make the complaint. It is submitted that the decision is not correct inasmuch as the District Magistrate was neither the successor of the first class Magistrate nor the superior Court to which he is subordinate within the meaning of sub-S. (3).

Where there are several Judges presiding over the same Court, any one of the Judges can order a complaint to be filed with regard to an offence committed in relation to the proceedings of the Court. Thus, one Judge of the High Court is competent to make a complaint with regard to an offence committed before another Judge of the High Court especially when the latter has ceased to hold office.[14] Similarly, a Sessions Judge has been held to be competent to make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the Additional Sessions Judge as they both are Judges of the same Court and, under S. 9 of the Code, there is only one Court of Session.[15]

Where a case is transferred for disposal from one Court to another, it is the transferee Court that tries and disposes of the case that is competent to complain for an offence committed in relation to the proceedings in that Court.[16] The transferring Court, for example a Magistrate who merely takes cognizance of the case or issues process, cannot make the complaint.[17] Thus, where an attempt to fabricate false evidence is made in a proceeding pending before the Magistrate at C but the case is transferred to the Magistrate at S who tries and disposes of the case, it is the latter that should make the complaint although the offence was not actually committed before him. The reason is that the attempt of fabrication of evidence was made in relation to the proceedings, that is to say, the original prosecution, in whichever Court it was ultimately tried, and the Court at S was the Court in which if the attempt had succeeded the false evidence would have been given. Further, the object of the section being to ensure that a prosecution will be launched only on the complaint of the Court which is in the best position to judge whether the prosecution is desirable in the interests of justice, it is essential that the Court trying the case should make the complaint.[18] The contrary view taken by a single Judge of the High Court of Allahabad,[19] is, it is submitted, not sound.

On the same principle as that discussed above, where a District Magistrate withdraws a case to his file and disposes of it himself, a complaint for an offence committed in relation to the proceedings in that case should be filed by him and not by the Magistrate who originally took cognizance of the case.[20] So also where a plaintiff first instituted a suit in Court A and obtained an ex parte decree only for a portion claimed, and subsequently filed a fresh suit in Court B in respect of the portion disallowed by Court A, it was held that Court B which tried and found the claim to be false should complain for an offence under S. 210, Penal Code.[21] Where, however, a claim based on a sale deed was produced before a Subordinate Judge but the claim suit was disposed of by the Munsif, and by the District Judge on appeal, it was held that the Subordinate Judge was competent to complain for an offence respecting the sale deed under S. 206, Penal Code, as the offence was committed in order to prevent a sale of the property attached by him and therefore was in relation to proceedings in his Court.[22]

Where a case is transferred to another Magistrate not for disposal, but for enquiry and report, judicial opinion is divided as to whether the enquiring Magistrate is competent to prefer a complaint with regard to the offence committed in the course of the enquiry. In the undermentioned case[23] it has been held that he is; while a contrary view has been expressed in the following cases.[24] But where a complaint is filed before a Magistrate who refers it to another Magistrate for enquiry and report the latter cannot prefer a complaint under Penal Code, S. 211 if he finds the complaint which was referred to him to be false.[25] As to when a superior Court can make a complaint, see S. 476-A.

17. "Court," meaning of—Sub-S. (2).—The term 'Court' has not been defined in the Code. The High Court of Madras[1] has held that two tests should be applied in order to see whether a particular officer is a Court, and they are:—

(a) authority to take evidence on oath, and

(b) authority to deal out justice, i.e., to give a final decision in the matter.

The High Courts of Calcutta,[2] and Bombay,[3] have held the same view as that of the High Court of Madras. The High Courts of Allahabad,[4] and Lahore,[5] have however held that it is not necessary to apply the second test, viz., authority to deal out justice, for the purpose of deciding as to whether or not a particular officer is a Court within the meaning of the section. The reason given for the latter view is that if that test were to be strictly applied the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which merely recommends or advises to His Majesty, or a Sessions Judge who passes a sentence of death subject to the confirmation by the High Court, cannot be considered to be Courts. The High Court of Lahore has accordingly held in the aforementioned case that a Commissioner, appointed under the Public Servants Inquiries Act, 37 of 1850, though he merely makes a report of the result of the enquiry held by him and does not in the narrow sense administer justice himself, is a Court within the meaning of the section. The section without giving a definition of the term Court says that it "includes" a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court but does not include a Registrar or a Sub-Registrar. Consequently a Registrar or a Sub-Registrar under the Registration Act has no power to make a complaint under the section in respect of the offences mentioned.[6] The word "includes" was substituted in 1923 for the word "means" which occurred originally. According to Sulaiman, J., of the High Court of Allahabad, the Legislature must be taken thereby to have intended to widen the scope of the definition in this section, by including Courts other than civil, criminal or revenue Courts referred to in S. 476.[7] This view has been followed by the High Court of Lahore.[8] In Bilas Singh v. King-Emperor,[8-a] Daniels, J., however, expressed himself as follows:—

S. 195, Note 17.

"It seems to me doubtful whether the Legislature in substituting the word 'includes' for 'means' in S. 195, sub-S. (2) really intended to widen the definition. They may have thought that to say that the term 'Court' means 'a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court but does not include a Registrar or Sub-Registrar,' implies that a Registrar or Sub-Registrar would be a Court unless specially excepted from the definition.....If the term Court in S. 195 is really wider than the Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court in S. 476, the curious result follows that whereas the order of the Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court making or refusing to make, a complaint, is subject to appeal and to a special procedure prescribed by S. 476, a similar order passed by a Court constituted is not subject to any appeal. The marginal Note to S. 476 read with the language of this section shows that it was enacted in order to prescribe the procedure to be followed in cases coming under S. 195, Cls. (b) and (c) and presumably in all such cases". It is submitted that this latter view is to be preferred to the former.

(12) Courts in Native States outside British India as for instance in Baroda, are not Courts within the meaning of this section.[41]

18. Subordination of Courts—Sub-S. (3).—Sub-S. (3) deals with the question of subordination of Courts for the purpose of this section. The Subordination of Courts generally for the purposes of the Code is dealt with by S. 17, ante and is different from that dealt with here.[1] Under this sub-section—

(1) where appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decree or sentence of a Court, such Court is subordinate to the appellate Court. It is enough if an appeal lies from the decisions of the Court although the particular proceeding in respect of which the offence is committed is not appealable.[2]
(a) where appeals lie from a decision of a Court to more Courts than one, the former is subordinate to the appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction [Proviso (a)].[2-a]

(b) where appeals lie both to a Civil and Revenue Court, then the subordination is determined by the nature of the proceedings in which the offence is alleged to have been committed. Where the proceedings are civil the subordination is to the civil appellate Court, and if revenue, to the revenue appellate Court [Proviso (b)].

(2) in the case of a Civil Court from whose decree no appeal lies it is subordinate to the principal Civil Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such Civil Court is situate.[3]

19. "Courts to which appeals ordinarily lie".—The following Courts have been held to be subordinate to the Courts mentioned, on the ground that appeals ordinarily lie thereto:—

(1) District Munsifs are subordinate to the District Judge[1] and not to a Subordinate Judge to whom appeals are transferred by the District Judge for disposal.[2] Where however a Subordinate Judge is empowered to entertain appeals directly from the decrees of Munsifs by virtue of special Notification under the sanction of the Local Government as required by the Provincial Civil Courts Act, it has been held that the Munsif is subordinate to the Subordinate Judge.[3]

(2) District Judge is subordinate to the High Court.[4]

(3) The Court of the Assistant Commissioner in Punjab[5] and the Deputy Commissioner in Lower Burma[6] are subordinate to the Commissioner.

(4) The Additional Recorder of Rangoon was held to be subordinate to the High Court of Calcutta, at a time when the High Court of Rangoon was not established.[7]

(5) A Single Judge of the High Court, according to the High Courts of Bombay,[8] Calcutta[8-a] and Madras,[9] is subordinate to the Bench which hears appeals from his judgment under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The High Court of Allahabad[10] and the Chief Court of Lower Burma[11] have, on the other hand, held that a Single Judge, is not subordinate to the Bench because both are Judges of the same Court.

(6) Revenue Courts are generally subordinate to the Board of Revenue to which appeals ordinarily lie.[12] But where any particular Act prescribes the appellate Court the subordination is to that Court. Thus, an Assistant Collector[13] acting under the Tenancy Act is subordinate to the District Collector. Similarly, a Thasildar holding mutation proceedings[14] has been held to be subordinate to the Deputy Commissioner. The appellate Court may also be a Civil Court. For example, under the Agra Tenancy Act, III of 1926, an appeal lies under S. 243 from the decree of a Collector to the District Judge, and hence the former is subordinate to the latter within the meaning of this section.[15]

(7) A Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge is subordinate to the High Court.[16]

(8) The District Magistrate[17] or the City Magistrate[18] is subordinate to the Sessions Judge.

of the former to the latter although in suits of the value of more than Rs. 5,000 appeals lie to the High Court;[1] and the High Court does not, by virtue of having actually heard the appeal in the particular civil matter relating to the offence, become the superior Court within the meaning of the section.[2]

(2) The District Judge in Central Provinces is subordinate to the Divisional Judge because under the Civil Courts Act in that province appeals lie to the latter Court in suits up to the value of Rs. 10,000 and it is only in suits beyond that value that appeals lie to the Judicial Commissioner.[3]

(3) The District Munsif in the Punjab is subordinate to the Subordinate Judge which is the appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction as appeals lie under the Punjab Civil Courts Act both to the Subordinate Judge as well as to the District Judge, from the decision of a Munsif.[4]

(4) The Commissioner of the Santhal Parganas is subordinate to the Court of the Commissioner of Bhagalpur.[5]

21. Subordination where appeals lie to a civil and also to a revenue Court—Proviso (b).—Where appeals lie from the decision of a Court both to a Civil Court and also to a Revenue Court, the subordination is determined by the nature of the case or proceeding in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed. Thus under the Agra Tenancy Act an appeal lies both to the District Judge as well as to the Collector, but in a suit for recovery of revenue the appeal lies to the District Judge and hence an Assistant Collector acting in such proceeding is subordinate to the District Judge.[1]

The words "or proceeding" have been newly added to give effect to the case noted below[2] decided under the Old Code. In that case it was held that proceedings in execution in a suit for arrears of rent were not appealable to the District Judge and the fact that the decree in the suit was appealable to the District Judge did not make the Revenue Court acting in the execution proceedings subordinate to the District Court.

22. Subordination of Civil Courts from whose decrees no appeal ordinarily lies.—A Civil Court from whose decree no appeal lies is subordinate to the Principal Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction within whose local limits such Court is situate. Thus, it has been held that there is subordination for the purpose of this section in the case of the following Courts:—

(1) A Provincial Small Cause Court is subordinate to the District Court.[1] Hence a Munsif[2] or a Sub-Judge[3] functioning as a Small Cause Court, is subordinate to the District Judge. In the case cited below[4] it has been held that a Small Cause Court at Saugor is subordinate to the Additional District Judge at Saugor as his jurisdiction is that of the District Judge and he is only the Additional Judge of the District Court in Jubbulpore sitting at Saugor.

(2) A Presidency Small Cause Court, whether presided over by a Single Judge or sitting as a Full Court is subordinate to the High Court.[5] The High Court of Calcutta[6] has held that according to the prevailing practice an appeal against an order for prosecution by the Small Cause Court lies to a Single Judge of the High Court exercising original jurisdiction. The High Court of Madras[7] has on the other hand held that a Bench of the High Court exercising appellate jurisdiction is competent to entertain and dispose of such an appeal.

(3) A Village Panchayat exercising jurisdiction in civil matters is a Civil Court and is subordinate to the District Court which is the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction.[8]

(4) A Village Munsif acting under the Village Courts Act, III of 1892, is also subordinate to the District Judge.[9]

(5) A Mamlatdar in Bombay is a Civil Court and therefore subordinate to the District Judge within the meaning of the section.[10]

S. 195, Notes 22—24.

The present section, unlike the corresponding provision in the Code of 1898, provides only for the subordination of Civil Courts from whose decrees no appeals lie and not that of Revenue Courts from whose decisions no appeals lie. Thus an Assistant Collector acting in execution proceedings in a suit, for arrears of rent is not subordinate to the District Judge.[11] The undermentioned cases[12] which held that Revenue Courts were subordinate to the District Judge are not good law under the present Code.

23. Abetment conspiracy and attempt to commit offences—Sub-S. (4).—Sub-Section (4) provides that the provisions of sub-S. (1) apply also to the abetment, conspiracy and attempt to commit the offences mentioned therein. Thus, a prosecution in respect of a charge of conspiracy under S. 120-B read with S. 193, I.P. Code, requires the complaint of the Court in or in relation to whose proceedings the offence is alleged to have been committed.[1] But in such a case it is also essential that the other conditions prescribed in sub-S. (1) should also be present. For instance, in the case of a conspiracy or attempt to commit forgery, it is essential that the offender should be a party to the proceeding in Court as required by Cl. (c) of sub-S. (1).[2]

24. Withdrawal of complaint filed by a public servant—Sub-S. (5).—Before the Amendment of 1923 it was held that where a public servant acted judicially as a Court and passed an order sanctioning prosecution for an offence referred to in Cl. (a) of this section, he must, for the purposes of appeal be taken to have acted as a Court, the forum of appeal being governed by the provisions of sub-S. (7) [now sub-S. (3)],[1] but that if he should be taken to have acted not as a Court, but in his executive capacity the forum of appeal was not governed by sub-S. (7).[2]

Under the Amending Act of 1923, there is an appeal only against a complaint preferred by a Court under S. 476, infra, in respect of offences falling within Cl. (b) and Cl. (c) of this section. (See S. 476-B).[2-a] Where a public servant, whether he is a Court or not, files a complaint in respect of an offence falling under Cl. (a) of this section, there is no appeal[3] but sub-S. (5)

newly added enables an authority to which such public servant is subordinate, to withdraw the complaint. Thus, a Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under Cl. (a) of sub-S. (1) is subordinate to the District Magistrate, the authority to which he is subordinate under S. 17 of the Code, and an application for withdrawal of the complaint should be made to him and not to the Court of Session to which appeal ordinarily lies from his decision as a Court.[4]

This sub-section applies only to complaints made under sub-S. (1) (a) and does not authorise the withdrawal of complaints filed under Cl. (b) or (c) of that sub-section.

The sub-section empowers a superior authority only to withdraw a complaint and not to make a complaint when the subordinate public servant has declined to do it.[5]

25. "Authority to which such public servant is subordinate".— It has been held that the High Court as being the authority to which a District Judge[1] or an Additional Sessions Judge[2] is subordinate within the meaning of this sub-section is competent to withdraw a complaint filed by the latter as public servant. In the case cited below[3] where a District Magistrate directed a complaint to be filed under S. 174, Penal Code, the High Court ordered the complaint to be withdrawn in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

For other instances of subordination of public servants, see Note 5, supra.

26. Appeal.—See Notes to S. 476-B, which contains a separate provision for appeal in respect of complaints by Courts.

or refusing sanction under the old Code are now obsolete and only of academic interest.

28. Revision whether lies against withdrawal of complaint under sub-S. (5).—The High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Patna[2] have held that a withdrawal of a complaint under sub-S. (5) is an administrative or executive act and hence not open to revision by the High Court. Thus, where the District Magistrate, as the authority to which the Police of the District is subordinate, orders a complaint filed by the Police to be withdrawn, it has been held that the order cannot be revised.[3] Similarly where the District Magistrate to whom the Returning Officer is subordinate under the Electoral Rules framed by the Local Government refuses to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint filed by the latter officer, the Allahabad High Court has held that the High Court cannot interfere with the order of the Magistrate as he did not act as a Court.[4]

In a recent decision[5] where a District Magistrate summarily rejected an application under this sub-section for the withdrawal of a complaint preferred by the joint Magistrate without giving notice or hearing the applicant it was held by the High Court of Madras that the application was by way of a judicial revision, and the order was open to revision under S. 439.

29. Dismissal of complaint for non-compliance with the section whether bars a fresh and proper complaint.—As already seen in Note 3 the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a complaint which does not conform to the requirements of the section. Where the Court dismisses a complaint on such ground, the dismissal does not operate as an acquittal by a Court of competent jurisdiction so as to bar a fresh and proper complaint in accordance with the section.[1] (See also commentaries under S. 403.)

30. Analagous provision in other Acts.—For similar provision under other Acts requiring the sanction or the complaint of an authority for a

1. Scope and object of section.—This section embodies one of the exceptions to the general rule that a prosecution can be initiated at the instance of any person. (See Notes under S. 4 (h) and S. 190). The section provides that in regard to the offences enumerated in it no proceedings can be taken in the absence of a complaint made by order of or under authority from the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government or any officer empowered in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council. Thus, in cases coming under this section, clauses (b) and (c) of S. 190 which enable cognizance to be taken by a Magistrate on a report of a Police-officer or on his own knowledge, information or suspicion have no application. Cognizance in cases coming under this section can only be taken on a complaint. Further, such complaint must be sanctioned by the authorities mentioned in the section.[1]

It will be seen that the offences enumerated in this section are of a very exceptional nature and are all of them in the nature of offences against the state either in its internal or (S. 108-A) in its external relations.[2] The object of the section is thus to prevent unauthorised persons from intruding in state affairs by instituting state prosecutions and to secure that such prosecutions shall only be instituted under the authority of the Government.[3]

This section being a disenabling section, must be construed strictly.[4] But, at the same time, it must be remembered that the policy of the Legislature underlying this section is to vest exclusively in the Government the discretion of initiating proceedings in respect of the offences enumerated in it and that such discretion cannot be delegated to or exercised by any other body or person.[5]

The considerations of policy which apply to the initiation of proceedings in respect of the offences mentioned in this section apply not only to the institution of a prosecution for the first time but also to the question whether it is desirable to launch a fresh prosecution if the first prosecution fails or is likely to fail on account of a technical defect.[6]

S. 108, ante provides for taking security for good behaviour from a person disseminating or attempting to disseminate seditious (or other) matter. No previous sanction is necessary for starting proceedings under the said section. But the section is preventive in its object and scope. Hence, where there is no apprehension of an accused hereafter doing any of the acts mentioned in the section it does not apply. In such a case, it is not open to take proceedings under the section merely because a person has committed any of the acts mentioned therein. The proper procedure would be to prosecute the accused for an offence after obtaining sanction under this section (S. 196).[7]

Cognizance under this section depends on complaint (made under authority emanating from certain sources) while cognizance under S. 197, infra depends on sanction.[8] Moreover, the two sections are distinct in their aims and scope and the considerations applicable to them are different. Hence, decisions bearing on the interpretation of S. 197 are not ipso facto applicable to the questions arising under this section.[9]

2. "Taking cognizance".—As to the meaning of the expression "taking cognizance of an offence", see Notes under S. 190.

As mentioned in the said Notes ordering a preliminary investigation by the police under S. 155 of the Code, is not "taking cognizance of an offence". Hence, a complaint made under the sanction of the Government is not necessary for ordering such an investigation.[1]

It has also been seen in the above Notes that the expression "taking cognizance" applies not only to cases where a Court for the first time becomes seised of a criminal transaction but also to cases where subsequently a different offence appears to be involved in such transaction and the Court proposes to proceed in respect of such offence. Hence, where a prosecution has been commenced on the basis of a sanction and a complaint under this section with reference to an offence under S. 121-A of the Penal Code but the facts proved do not amount to an offence under S. 121-A but amount to an offence under S. 124-A it is not open to the Court to proceed in respect of the latter offence in the absence of a sanction and complaint directed specifically to it.[2]

3. "Complaint made by order of or under authority from. . . ."— These words do not mean that the actual complaint must have been sanctioned by the Government. In other words, it is not necessary that the very words used in a complaint must have been sanctioned by the Government. It is enough if the institution of the complaint has been sanctioned by the Government.[1] But the discretion to decide whether in any case a prosecution should be started for any of the offences enumerated in the section is vested exclusively in the Government. It is beyond the power of the Government to delegate its discretion in this respect to any other person or body of persons.[2] Hence, the sanction of the Government must be given with reference to each case specifically. Therefore, the Government must specify in each case the person against whom[3] and the matter in respect of which a prosecution should be launched; and the complaint must accord with the sanction in both these respects. Thus, where the acts in respect of which a prosecution has been sanctioned constitute an offence under S. 121-A of the Penal Code, a charge for an offence under S. 124-A cannot be sustained on such a sanction.[4] Similarly, where the order for prosecution relates to a definite offence committed on a particular occasion, a prosecution in respect of a distinct offence committed on a different occasion cannot be sustained on the basis of such an order.[5]

It would also appear that a sanction under this section must contemplate the institution of a complaint by a definite person and must not be merely a sanction in the abstract which is not addressed to anybody in particular.[6] But where a prosecution has been ordered and a complaint is made by an official the presumption that official acts are regularly done may be applied and it may be presumed that the official making the complaint is duly authorised to do so.[7] Moreover, in the undermentioned cases,[8] it was held that the defect in a sanction due to the failure to address it to some determinate person is only an irregularity which does not go to the root of the jurisdiction.

Subject to the considerations set forth above, an order sanctioning a prosecution under this section need not be in any particular from.[9] Similarly, though a sanction of prosecution under the section must be expressed with sufficient particularity[10] to indicate clearly the matter which is to be the subject of the proceedings, there is no rigid rule as to the degree of particularity required.[11] Thus, it has been held in a prosecution for sedition under S. 124-A that the sanction need not set out the alleged seditious passages if the articles or speeches in which such passages occur are indicated.[12] It has even been held that the particular article in which the alleged seditious matter occurs need not be specified and that an order for prosecution in respect of "certain articles" appearing in a specified newspaper without mentioning the dates on which the articles appeared in the paper and without giving any other particulars is sufficient for the purposes of this section.[13]

An order for prosecution under this section need not be in writing.[14] It may be communicated to the officer who is to set the law in motion in any manner. Thus a sanction to prosecute may be communicated by telegram.[15] There is also no restriction as to the person who can be ordered to make a complaint under this section.[16] Thus, a Police-officer may be authorised to make such a complaint.[17]

4. Signature of order of sanction.—It is not necessary that an order sanctioning a prosecution under this section must be signed personally by the head of the Government issuing the order. It is enough if the order is signed by some gazetted officer having authority to sign such orders on behalf of the Government. (See S. 78 of the Evidence Act). For instance, the order may be signed by the Chief Secretary to the Government.[1] But the signature by an officer who is not head of the department concerned so as to attract the provisions of S. 78 of the Evidence Act and who is not otherwise proved to have been authorised to sign the order on behalf of the Government is not sufficient. Thus, a signature by a Deputy Secretary to the Government was held to be insufficient in the undermentioned case.[2] In the same case it was also held that the Deputy Secretary could not sign on behalf of the Chief Secretary (who could have signed the order) as the Chief Secretary was himself a delegate.

A Court can take judicial notice of the signature of a gazetted officer who has signed an order for prosecution under this section.[3] (See Evidence Act, S. 57.[7]

A person signing an order for prosecution not being himself complainant need not be examined on oath in the case.[4]

5. Specification of section under which complaint is to be made.— There is a conflict of decisions as to whether an order for prosecution under this section must specify the section under which the alleged offence falls. On the one hand it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that such section must be specified in the sanction and that a prosecution in respect of an offence under a section which is not so specified is illegal. In other words, the sanction should specifically be directed to the particular section in respect of which proceedings are to be taken and the order or authority should be preceded by and be the result of a deliberate determination that proceedings shall be taken in respect of a particular section or particular sections and no other. It would be opposed to the true intendment of this section for the Government by its order to give its legal or other advisers a roving power of determining under what sections proceedings should be taken. Hence, where an order is for prosecution under certain specified sections "or under any other section which may be found applicable", the alternative clause is illegal and cannot be the basis of proceedings under a section not specifically mentioned in the order.[1]

On the other hand it has been held by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court that the particular section under which the prosecution is to be started need not be specified in the sanction provided that the matter of complaint is otherwise made clear.[2] A similar view was expressed by one of the presiding Judges in the undermentioned decision of the Rangoon High Court.[3] Attention may also be drawn to a case of the Bombay High Court noted below.[4] In that case, a prosecution was ordered to be started under S. 124-A of the Penal Code and any other section of the Code that might be found applicable. The prosecution was instituted under S. 124-A of the Penal Code. No objection was raised as to the validity of the sanction on the ground of its giving a choice to the prosecutor in the matter of selection of the section under which to proceed.

The decisions of the Madras High Court are varying. In the undermentioned case[5] the view of the Calcutta High Court was approved but it was held that a sanction for prosecution under either of two specified sections in the alternative was regular and did not come within the prohibition laid down by the Calcutta High Court. But the Calcutta view was disapproved by one of the presiding judges in the case noted below.[6]

Where a sanction was given for prosecution under S. 121 of the Penal Code in respect of certain activities of the accused and under S. 124-A in respect of certain speeches delivered by him it was held that a prosecution under S. 121 in respect of the speeches was covered by the sanction.[7]

Where a prosecution under S. 124-A was sanctioned it was held that the abetment of an offence under S. 124-A, was also an offence under S. 124-A and a prosecution for such abetment was justified under the sanction.[8]

6. Proof of sanction.—In a prosecution for an offence mentioned in this section the sanction of the Government for such prosecution must be strictly proved.[1] A sanction communicated by telegram must be proved to emanate from the Government. The Court is forbidden by the express provisions of S. 88 of the Evidence Act to make any presumption as to the person by whom the telegram was sent.[2]

7. Who can sanction prosecution.—Under this section a prosecution can be sanctioned only by the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf. Thus, it is only the Governor-General in Council that can empower an officer to order or authorise a complaint to be made under this section.[1]

Where a sanction is issued by the Government it must be the act of the Government as a body and not of a single member of it.[2]

It is not open to accused person to dispute the right of the de facto Government to exercise the powers of Government including that of sanctioning prosecutions under this section.[3]

S. 196, Notes 8—10.

8. Sanction not judicial function.—The Government in according or withholding sanction under this section acts purely in an executive capacity and not on a judicial capacity.[1] Hence, such sanction need not be based on legal evidence.[2] Nor is it necessary that the Government in sanctioning a prosecution should give reasons for doing so.[3] Similarly, it is not necessary, before sanctioning a prosecution, that the accused must be given an opportunity of showing why his prosecution should not be ordered.[4]

9. Form and contents of complaint.—A complaint under this section must fulfil the requirements of the definition of a complaint under S. 4 (h).[1] It is not necessary according to such definition that the complaint must be in writing[2] or that it must be made on oath.[3] But the complaint must set out the facts constituting the alleged offence.[4] If such facts are not stated, the proceedings are liable to be quashed,[5] though after the proceedings have been terminated, a conviction cannot be set aside on the ground purely that the complaint did not properly set out the facts of the case.[6]

It is absolutely necessary that a complaint under this section should specify the accused person against whom action is to be taken. No proceedings can be sustained against a person who is not mentioned as an accused in the complaint although his name may appear as an accused in the order sanctioning the prosecution.[7]

In a prosecution for sedition the complaint must set out the alleged seditious words used by the accused.[8]

10. Want of sanction—Effect.—The sanction of the Government is a condition precedent for the validity of a prosecution under this section. Hence, such a prosecution is illegal in the absence of such sanction.[1] Moreover, the sanction must be given before the proceedings are started. Sanction given after the proceedings are commenced is not enough.[2] S. 196, Notes 10—11.

S. 532, infra, provides that if a Magistrate purporting to exercise powers duly conferred, which were not so conferred, commits an accused person to the sessions, the Court of Session may, if the accused has not been prejudiced, accept the commitment. The question has arisen whether this section applies to cases where a Magistrate has committed an accused person to the sessions in the absence of the sanction and complaint required by this section. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court[3] and the Chief Court of the Punjab[4] that S. 532 does not apply to such cases. The reasons given for such a view are:—

(1) S. 532 only applies to cases where the Magistrate who has purported to commit has not been duly invested with the powers under which he purports to make the commitment, that is, when the defect is one personal to the committing officer and not a defect in his proceedings.

(2) A distinction must be made between cases coming under this section and cases coming under S. 197. Under S. 197 jurisdiction to take cognizance depends on the sanction of the Government. Hence it can be argued with reference to cases under that section that a Magistrate "purports to exercise powers duly conferred." But under this section (S. 196) the power to take cognizance depends on a complaint being made. Hence, it would not be correct to say that in such cases, a Magistrate "purports to exercise the powers duly conferred."

But the above distinctions have not been recognised by the Bombay High Court which has taken a contrary view in the matter.[5] See also, S. 532, Note 2.

11. Want of complaint—Effect.—A mere sanction of prosecution by the Government is not enough for the validity of proceedings under this section in the absence of a valid complaint based upon such sanction.[1] In the undermentioned decision of the Punjab Chief Court,[2] however, it was held that the letter embodying the sanction may itself be treated as a complaint and that at any rate the want of a complaint in such circumstances is only an irregularity curable under S. 537.

12. Facts of case amounting to offence requiring sanction as well as other offence—Effect.—Where the facts of a case amount to an offence which requires for its prosecution a sanction under this section as well as an offence which does not require such sanction the question arises whether proceedings can be taken in respect of the latter offence in the absence of the sanction mentioned in this section. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. The general opinion is that there is no bar to such proceedings.[1] But the Allahabad High Court has taken a different view in the undermentioned decisions.[2]

SCOPE AND OBJECT OF THE SECTION	1
CHIEF PRESIDENCY MAGISTRATE—POWER OF TO SANCTION PROSECUTION UNDER THE SECTION	2
ESSENTIALS OF SANCTION	3
WHETHER MAGISTRATE WHO HAS SANCTIONED PROSECUTION CAN TRY A CASE	4
PROVISO	5
WANT OF SANCTION—EFFECT	6

1. Scope and object of the section.—The offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under S. 120-B of the Penal Code, is defined in S. 120-A of that Code, as follows:—

"When two or more persons agree to do or cause to be done,—

(1) an illegal act, or

(2) an act which is not illegal by illegal means, such agreement is designated a criminal conspiracy.

Provided that no agreement except an agreement to commit an offence shall amount to a criminal conspiracy unless some act besides the agreement is done by one or more parties to such agreement in pursuance thereof.

Explanation.—It is immaterial whether the illegal act is the ultimate object of such agreement, or is merely incidental to that object."

From the above definition it is clear that a criminal conspiracy need not necessarily have as its object the commission of an offence and that an overt act in pursuance of the agreement is not always necessary to constitute a criminal conspiracy.

This section is intended to see that prosecutions for the offence are not started in cases which are not of a sufficiently serious nature.[1]

The following conditions are necessary for the application of the section:—

(1) The offence charged must be that of criminal conspiracy. Where the offence charged is not criminal conspiracy but some other offence, the mere fact that it is asserted that the accused "conspired" to commit the offence in the sense that they are jointly responsible for the offence will not make this section applicable.[2]

(2) The criminal conspiracy must be one punishable under S. 120-B of the Penal Code. Thus, if the offence charged is abetment of an offence by conspiracy, no sanction is necessary under this section, because, though the element of the conspiracy is present in such an offence, it is not punishable under S. 120-B of the Penal Code, but under other sections (e.g., S. 109).[3] The distinction between the two offences consists in this. To constitute the offence of criminal conspiracy (to commit an offence) no overt act besides the agreement is necessary. But to constitute the offence of abetment of an offence by conspiracy some act or illegal omission in pursuance of the agreement is necessary. (See S. 107, I.P.C.)

(1934) 1934 Pat. 561 (563): 13 Pat. 729, Bhikhari Singh v. Emperor. (The fact that S. 196-A has been inserted shows that the Legislature is anxious that the prosecution under S. 120-B should not be started indiscriminately).

(2) (1928) 1928 Mad. 1158 (1161, 1164): 52 Mad. 695, Nune Panakalu v. Ravula Subba Rao.

(3) The object of the conspiracy must be one mentioned in the section. A criminal conspiracy entered into with any of the following objects will be within the section:—

(1) Doing an illegal act not amounting to an offence.

(2) Doing a legal act by illegal means.[4]

(3) Committing an offence mentioned in S. 196, ante.

(4) Committing a non-cognizable offence.[5]

(5) Committing a cognizable offence not punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for two or more years.

If the object of a criminal conspiracy does not fall within any of the above categories, the section will not apply. Thus, the commission of a cognizable offence punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment and not covered by S. 196, ante, is not included in the section and no sanction will be necessary for a prosecution for a criminal conspiracy having as its object the commission of such an offence.[6] In such cases, sanction will not be necessary even where the object of the conspiracy is sought to be attained by doing an act which is covered by the section, such as, for instance, the commission of a non-cognizable offence.[7] Similarly, in such cases, sanction will not be necessary merely because, the offence which is alleged to be the object of the conspiracy is one which cannot be taken cognizance of without the sanction of a particular authority.[8] Thus, an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Arms Act cannot be taken cognizance of without the sanction of the District Magistrate. (See S. 29 of the Arms Act.) But such an offence being a cognizable one punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three years, and not being covered by S. 196, ante, a criminal conspiracy with the object of committing such an offence will be outside the purview of this section and no sanction will be necessary for a prosecution in respect of such conspiracy.[9]

2. Chief Presidency Magistrate—Power of, to sanction prosecution under the section.—The words "empowered in this behalf" in sub-S. (2) of this section apply not only to the District Magistrate but also to the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Hence, a Chief Presidency Magistrate cannot sanction a prosecution under this section unless he is empowered in this behalf by the Local Government.[1]

3. Essentials of sanction.—No particular form is prescribed for a sanction under this section,[1] (except that in cases coming under sub-S. (2) the sanction must be in writing.)

It has been held, that in sanctioning a prosecution under this section, the sanctioning authority is to see not whether the allegations made by the prosecution side are true but whether if true, the case is such that in the interests of public justice, there should be a trial.[2]

4. Whether Magistrate who has sanctioned prosecution can try a case.—When an application is made to a Chief Presidency Magistrate or a District Magistrate for sanctioning a prosecution under sub-S. (2) of this section, he is to see, not whether the allegations made in the application are true but whether, if true the case is such that it is necessary in the interests of justice to consent to the initiation of judicial proceedings. Hence, it has been held that the fact that a District Magistrate (or Chief Presidency Magistrate) has sanctioned a prosecution under sub-S. (2) of this section is neither a disqualification preventing such Magistrate from trying the case under S. 556, post nor in itself a ground for transferring the case from him.[1]

5. Proviso.—If the object of a criminal conspiracy is to commit an offence to which the provisions of S. 195, sub-S. (1) apply, then, under sub-S. (4) of that section the complaint of the public servant or the Court concerned (as the case may be) is necessary to enable a Court to take cognizance of the offence constituted by the criminal conspiracy.[1] In such a case, according to the proviso, this section does not apply.[2] Where, however, there are several accused persons in a case and the provisions of S. 195 apply only with regard to some and not with regard to the others, this section will only apply to the latter and a sanction will be necessary for their prosecution.[3]

6. Want of sanction—Effect.—The want of sanction under this section is fatal to the proceedings and a conviction obtained in the absence of such sanction must be set aside as illegal.[1]

The section applies not only when, for the first time, a Court becomes seised of a criminal transaction; but also applies to cases were subsequent to the initiation of proceedings with reference to an offence not requiring sanction under this section, it is found that the transaction in question involves an offence of criminal conspiracy under S. 120-B of the Penal Code, and it is proposed to proceed in respect of such offence. Hence, it is necessary even in such cases that the sanction referred to in this section must be obtained. (See, Notes under S. 190).[2] But it is not necessary that such sanction must be obtained before the original commencement of the proceedings. It is enough if such sanction is obtained before the charge in respect of the criminal conspiracy is added or substituted.[3]

This section merely precludes a Court from taking cognizance of an offence of criminal conspiracy. Hence, a Court is not precluded from taking cognizance of a different offence in the absence of a sanction under this section, though the facts of the case are such that the accused might have been charged with an offence for the prosecution of which a sanction under this section would be necessary.[4]

Suppose, a prosecution is started for an offence of criminal conspiracy in the absence of the sanction required under this section. The question has arisen whether in such cases, if the facts disclose also a different offence, the

SCOPE	2

1. Legislative Changes.—This section has been newly added by S. 49 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923).

2. Scope.—The Select Committee in their report in this connection say as follows:—

"This new section is designed to meet the difficulty which arises from the fact that cases under Ss. 196 and 196-A cannot be properly investigated by the police before complaints are made. Doubts have arisen as to whether investigation can be ordered under S. 155, sub-S. (2) by a Magistrate without his taking cognizance of the case."

(CODE OF 1872—S. 466.)

466. A complaint of an offence committed by a public servant in his capacity as such public servant, of which any Judge or any public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government is accused as such Judge or public servant, shall not be entertained against such Judge or public servant, except with the sanction or under the direction of the Local Government, or of some officer empowered by the Local Government or of some Court or other authority to which such Judge or public servant is subordinate, and whose power so to sanction or direct such prosecution the Local Government shall not think fit to limit or reserve.

Prosecution of Judges and public servants.

No such Judge or public servant shall be prosecuted for any act purporting to be done by him in the discharge of his duty, unless with the sanction of Government.

Sanction when to be given.

The sanction must be given before the commencement of the proceedings.

Power of Local Government.

The Local Government may limit the person by whom, and the manner in which, the prosecution is to be conducted, and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be held.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 167.)

167. A charge of an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code, of which any Judge or any public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government, is accused as such Judge or public servant, shall not be entertained against such Judge or public servant, except with the sanction or under the direction of the Local Government, or of some Officer empowered by the Local Government, or of some Court or other authority to which such Judge or public servant is subordinate, and whose power so to sanction or direct such prosecution the Local Government shall not think fit to limit or reserve.

1. Scope and object of section.—The right to prosecute any person or body of persons by whom one may have been injured is a common right which can only be limited by special legislation; and in considering whether the right has been taken away, it must be seen whether it is taken away by express words or by necessary implication.[1] This section is an instance of a provision restricting the above right. The section embodies one of the exceptions to the general rule laid down in S. 190, that any offence may be taken cognizance of by the Magistrates enumerated therein.[2]

The object of the section is to guard against vexatious proceedings against public servants and to secure the well considered opinion of a superior authority before a prosecution is launched against them.[3] But this qualified protection does not apply to all public servants or to all offences. The section only applies to a limited class of public servants and to a limited class of offences. In other words, before the section can be invoked, two conditions must be satisfied:—

(1) The accused must be a public servant of the kind mentioned in the section; i.e., he must be a Judge or Magistrate or a public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Local Government or of some higher authority.

(2) The offence must be committed by the accused while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty.[4]

This section may be compared with S. 196, ante. The latter section refers to the nature of the offence charged. This section refers to the status of the accused. Further, S. 196 requires two conditions:—

(1) a complaint and

(2) a sanction (proceeding from any of the authorities mentioned in the section) on which such complaint is founded.

But the present section requires only a sanction for the prosecution. No formal complaint is necessary as in the case of S. 196.[5]

The section applies to offences under the Penal Code as well as to offences under other laws.[6] It has been held that the section applies even to offences

2. Judge.—A "Judge" as defined in S. 19 of the Penal Code is entitled to the protection of this section whether or not he is removable from his office without the sanction of the Government.[1] This is now made clear by the amendment of the section in 1923.

The following persons have been held to be Judges for the purpose of this section:—

(1) The President of a Municipality or other Local Board when accepting or rejecting nomination papers for election.[2]

(2) A member of a village panchayat Court.[3]

(3) A village Munsif in the Madras Presidency trying suits under the Madras Village Courts Act (1889).[4]

(4) A Village Magistrate in the Madras Presidency when trying an offender under Regulation, XI of 1816.[5] But a Village Magistrate when he is preventing the commission of an offence does not act as a Judge.[6]

See also Note 3, infra.

3. Magistrate.—Before the amendment of the section in 1923 the section did not apply to Magistrates as such. A Magistrate would be entitled to protection under the old section only if he was not removable from office without the sanction of the Government or if the offence was committed by him as a Judge, i.e., while trying a case (See S. 19, Penal Code). A Magistrate who was removable without the sanction of the Government and who was accused of an offence committed by him while merely holding an inquiry (not being a trial) under the Code would be outside the purview of the section. Under the amended section such a Magistrate also would be entitled to the protection of this section.[1] of "public servant" see S. 21 of the Penal Code (which applies to this Code by force of S. 4, sub-S. (2), ante).

This section applies only to such public servants as are not removable from office save by or with the sanction of the Local Government or of some higher authority. Before the amendment of the section in 1923 the section applied to public servants who were not removable from office "without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government". These words would not include public servants removable from office only by the Secretary of State for India and not by the Local Government or the Government of India. The alteration of the section brings such public servants also within the purview of the section.[1]

The substitution of the words "save by or with the sanction" for the words "without the sanction" which occurred in the section before the above amendment gives legislative effect to the view taken under the old section that the test for the applicability of the section is not only that the public servant must not be removable by any other authority than that mentioned in the section but also that he must be removable by such authority. In other words, the public servant must be capable of being removed from his office by any of the authorities mentioned in the section.[2]

The expression "Government" in the section refers to the Government acting in its executive capacity. Hence a public servant who is removable from his office only by the Legislature is not entitled to the protection of this section.[3] The Commissioner in Sind is not a "Local Government" within the meaning of this section.[4]

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the section applies to public servants who are removable from office by an authority to whom the Government has delegated the power of dismissal. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras,[5] Lahore[6] and Rangoon[7] that the section applies in such cases. The reason given is that in such cases, the Local Government itself acts, though a particular officer is chosen as the medium through whom the act is done and that it is an ordinary case of qui facit per alium facit per se, (he who acts through another acts through himself).[8] But a contrary view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court on the ground that there is no mention in the section of any delegated authority.[9] A similar view has also been taken in a later Madras decision.[9-a] But where the power of removal has been transferred out and out by the Local Government to some other authority, this section will not apply.[9-b]

S. 197, Note 4.

There is a difference between removal from office and ceasing to hold office. The fact that a public servant will cease to hold office in certain circumstances does not affect the question whether he can be removed from his office without the sanction of the Government. Thus, the president of a Taluk Board who is not removable from office without the sanction of the Government is entitled to the protection of this section, though if he absents himself from a certain number of meetings, he will cease to hold office even without being removed from it.[10]

Where a public servant is removable from his office without the sanction of any of the authorities mentioned in the section, the fact that the Local Government has the power of restoring to office such public servant after his dismissal by some other authority does not bring him within the purview of this section.[11]

In determining the question of the applicability of this section, it is the status of the accused at the time of the commission of the offence and not at the time of the commencement of the prosecution that must be taken into account.[12]

A Corporation (like the Calcutta Municipality) is not a public servant within the meaning of this section.[13] The protection conferred by this section on the public servants mentioned therein does not extend to persons to whom such public servants may delegate any portion of their powers.[14]

The following have been held to be public servants to whom the section applies:—

(1) Member of Municipal Council.[15]

(2) Member of District Board.[16]

(3) President of Taluk Board.[17]

(4) President of Municipality.[18]

(5) The village officers referred to in the undermentioned cases.[19]

5. Receiver appointed by Court—Prosecution of.—A receiver appointed by a Court is not a public servant who is "not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of a Local Government or some higher authority". Hence, the sanction of the Local Government is not necessary for his prosecution in respect of acts done by him as receiver. Nor is the permission of the Court which appointed the receiver necessary for his prosecution,[1] the reason being that in the absence of a specific provision of law exempting a person from prosecution either expressly or by necessary implication, the status of a person is by itself no bar to his prosecution. (See, Note 1, ante.)

The High Court of Calcutta has, however, held that the sanction of the Court must be obtained before a prosecution is instituted against the receiver for criminal breach of trust in respect of the properties taken possession of by him as receiver.[2] This view is based on principles guiding the Court of Chancery in England, and not on any specific provision of law. It is submitted that this view is not correct.

S. 197, Notes 5—6.

6. "Is accused . . . duty".—The corresponding words that occurred in the section before its amendment in 1923 were "is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence". There was a conflict of decisions as to the interpretation of these words. The general view was that the words referred to all offences committed by him in the course of an action which was taken or purported to be taken in compliance with an official duty.[1] But in a few decisions it was held that the words only applied to cases where the offence was such that the fact of the offender being a public servant was an essential ingredient of the offence as it was defined under the law.[2] In other words, according to this view, the section only applied to those offences which according to their definition under the law could only be committed by public servants and not by others, as, for example, an offence of taking or attempting to take a bribe (Indian Penal Code, S. 161)[3] or an offence of fabrication by a Judge of the record of a case before him (Indian Penal Code, Ss. 167, 218)[4] but not to offences which could be committed by anybody and not by a public servant or Judge alone.[5] Thus, where a Judge used insulting and defamatory language in the course of the trial of a case it was held that the section did not apply to the offence (if any) committed by the Judge.[6] Similarly, it was held that where a public servant was entrusted in his official capacity with certain moneys and he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of such moneys it was held that the offence not being one which could only be committed by a public servant, the section did not apply.[7] So also, where the Superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory in Madras imported certain timber (required for such factory) without taking out a license and thereby committed an offence under a certain Municipal Act, it was held that as the offence was not one which could be committed only by a public servant, the section did not apply to the case.[8]

By S. 50 of Act XVIII of 1923 the words "as the Judge or public servant" were replaced by the words "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty;" the object of the amendment was stated to be to amplify the words and to make the sense clear.[9] There has, nevertheless, been a conflict of decisions as to the interpretation of these words also. At least four different views have been expressed:—

(1) The first view is that the section applies only where the offence is such that it can be committed only by a public servant and not by anybody else.[10] But this view has been only very rarely expressed. It is generally accepted that such a view is not correct and that the present section makes it clear that the test is not whether the offence is capable of being committed only by a public servant and not by anybody else but whether it is committed under the circumstances specified in the section.[11] In other words the question as to whether the particular offence comes under the present section depends not on the nature of the offence but on the circumstances under which it is committed.

(2) The second view is that the section applies only if the act complained of is itself done by the public servant in pursuance of his public office although it may be in excess of the duty or an absence of such duty.[12]

(3) The third view is that the section refers to cases where the act constituting the offence is so connected with the official duty or act as to be inseparable from it, in other words, is so connected with the official duty or act as to form part of the same transaction.[13] This view is wider than the second view stated above and the difference may be brought out by means of an illustration.

A, a public servant was engaged in the task of realising certain taxes from some persons who had defaulted in their payment. He was talking to the defaulters in connection with the business. A crowd of spectators had gathered round him. While he was thus engaged he suddenly turned round when he saw the complainant, one of the spectators, standing at a little distance from him in a posture which he thought was disrespectful to him. Thereupon he assaulted the complainant and handled him roughly. Held, that the act of the public servant in the circumstances of the case, formed part of the transaction (viz., the realisation of arrears of taxes) in which he was engaged in the discharge of his official duty and that he is entitled him to the protection under this section.[14] According to the second view expressed above, however, the act could not be said to be in pursuance of any official duty.

(4) The fourth view is that it is not necessary that the action involving the offence must be done or purported to be done in compliance with an official duty. It is enough if the action relates to the discharge of an official duty, although it may be in derogation of that official duty. In other words, the applicability of the section depends not on the nature of the action which involves the offence but on the matter to which the action relates so that the words "in the discharge of an official duty" might be read as "in the matter of the discharge of an official duty." Thus, where it is the duty of a public servant as such to keep a certain building of which he is in charge in a sanitary condition and he fails in his duty in this respect and thereby commits an offence, it cannot be said that his failure or omission is in compliance with such official duty. Nevertheless, it has been held that he commits the offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of an official duty.[15] Similarly, a Municipal Councillor who in violation of his obligation as such Councillor acquires a share in a contract with the Municipality (of which he is a Councillor) and thereby commits an offence has been held entitled to the protection granted by this section.[16] But in such cases the action of the accused relates to the discharge of his duty as a public servant. This view is, however, very wide.

But in spite of the conflict of decisions above referred to, it is settled law that an offence which does not come within any of the categories enumerated in the above classification is not covered by this section. In other words, this section applies only to acts that can be said to be done in an official capacity and not to acts done in a private capacity. The conflict of decisions above referred to is only as to the question when an act constituting an offence can be said to be done in an official capacity. Thus, the mere fact that an offence is committed by a public servant when he is in office is not enough to attract the provisions of this section.[17] It is not even enough to bring a case within this section that an offence is committed by a public servant at a time during which he is engaged in the transaction of official business.[18] Thus an offence will not come within the section merely because it is committed by a Judge while he is sitting on the Bench and trying cases. The reason is that a certain person when the circumstances do not justify such action. The offence (if any) is committed by the accused while purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty.[24]

Judge sitting on the Bench can act in a private as well as in official capacity and this section does not apply to acts done in a private capacity.[19]

It is a question of fact in each case whether the alleged offence has been committed in an official capacity or not.[20] In determining this question the Court must at the outset have regard to the allegations in the complaint (if any) in the case.[21]

The section does not mean that the very act which constitute the offence must be the official duty of the public servant concerned. If such were the case the section would have no operation at all and would involve a contradiction in terms because an act cannot at the same time be an official duty as well as an offence.[22]

(3) A Judge (having the duty of maintaining a record of cases tried by him) fabricates the records of a case before him and thereby commits an offence. He commits the offence while acting in the discharge of an official duty, because the action which he takes, viz., the preparation of the record is a duty imposed on him by his official position.[25] Even if the record should relate to an entirely imaginary case, the offence committed by the Judge would come within the provisions of this section, because, in such cases, the accused would be purporting to act in the discharge of an official duty,[26] in other words, he would be professing to discharge an official duty, though not actually doing so.

(6) A Municipal Councillor being prohibited from entering into or acquiring any interest in any contract with the Municipality of which he is a Councillor does so and thereby commits an offence. He does not commit the offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, because the action which he takes is not required by his official duty.[29]

The alleged offence is not committed while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of an official duty.[30]

(8) A Judge was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while preventing an offence. Held, that he did not commit the offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, as the prevention of offences was not one of his official duties.[31]

S. 197, Note 6.

It will be seen from the above illustrations that a public servant who does not purport to act in the discharge of his official duty but merely uses his official position to do an illegal act cannot claim the benefit of this section.[34]

In order that a public servant may be held to purport to act in the discharge of his official duty, it is not necessary that the action purported to be done by him must be strictly within his powers as such public servant. It is enough if he purports to act in the capacity with which he is clothed.[35] Thus, where a village munsif in a suit tried by him ordered the attachment before judgment of certain property and its removal under such attachment it was held that he purported to act in the discharge of his official duty though he acted ultra vires of his powers.[36] Similarly, where the President of a Municipality entered a private house for the purpose of inspecting the water connection, it was held that his action though irregular as not having been authorised by the Municipal Committee (as required under the law) was purported to be done by him in the discharge of his official duty.[37] So also, where the President of a

Union Board published by affixing on the notice board of his office and otherwise a notice that a certain election had been postponed and in giving the reasons for the postponement he made certain statements which were objected to as defamatory, it was held that the offence (if any) was committed by him while purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty though his action in publishing in the above manner the fact of postponement of the election might not have been authorised under the rules.[38]

But the action purported to be done by the public servant in the discharge of his official duty must not be totally unlike anything which he is authorised to do by virtue of his official position. In other words, such action must be of the sort that the public servant is empowered to do in the course of his official duties.[39]

It has been held in the undermentioned case[40] that if a public servant does not act in the belief that he is discharging his official duty, he cannot claim the protection of this section. It is submitted that this view does not seem to be correct.[41]

Suppose a public servant holds two offices. One of them is of the kind specified in this section and the other is not. If an offence is committed by the public servant in his capacity as holding the latter office the section does not apply.[42] But where a public servant holding an office of the kind mentioned in this section is, as such public servant, appointed to another office, his official acts in connection with the latter office will also relate to the former office and if they involve any offence will attract the provisions of this section.[43] Thus, where members of a Municipal Council (who are public servants to whom this section applies) are appointed, as such, to a Committee for the preparation of an electoral roll for the Municipal elections, this section will apply to offences committed by them in the discharge of their duties as members of such committee.[44]

7. Taking cognizance.—As to the meaning of the expression "taking cognizance of an offence", see Notes under S. 190.

On receipt of reports containing allegations of certain offences against a public servant, the Government directed the Magistrate of the district in which the public servant was serving to make a preliminary inquiry into the truth of the allegations and make a report on the same. The Magistrate examined various persons at such inquiry. Held, that the proceedings of the Magistrate did not amount to a taking cognizance of the offence alleged against the public servant.[1]

It has been seen in the Notes under S. 190 that the examination of the complaint under S. 200 is as contemplated by the Code to take place only on a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence. Hence, the view expressed in the undermentioned cases[2] that when a complaint is preferred against a public servant as to an offence falling within the purview of this section, the Magistrate is required to examine the complainant on oath under S. 200 even in the absence of the sanction mentioned in this section is not correct.

Where a sanction is given for a prosecution in respect of a certain offence, it is not open to the Court to proceed in respect of a different offence. But, if the charge in respect of such (different) offence is founded on the same facts as those on which a prosecution has been sanctioned there is no bar to the Court proceeding with that charge.[3] (See S. 230). (See also Notes under S. 190).

8. Who can sanction prosecution.—Under this section a prosecution can be sanctioned only by the Local Government. The Local Government cannot delegate its power in this respect to anybody else.[1]

Before the amendment of the section in 1923, it was provided that sanction to prosecute could be given by the Government empowered to order the removal of the public servant in question or by certain other authorities specified in the section. The cases decided before the above amendment and bearing on the question as to what authorities could sanction a prosecution under this section[2] are therefore only of academic interest now.

S. 197, Note 9.

9. Essentials of sanction.—A sanction under this section must specify the offence for which the prosecution should be started.[1] A sanction which leaves it to another to determine the offence in respect of which proceedings should be started is invalid and a prosecution based on such sanction is illegal.[2] Thus, an order sanctioning the prosecution of the accused "for bribery or such other charges as the District Magistrate thinks likely to stand investigation by Criminal Courts" is not sufficient.[3]

But, the section under which the alleged offence falls or the name of the offence need not be specified in the sanction. It is enough if the facts constituting the offence are set out with sufficient clearness in the order granting sanction.[4] Hence, where the particulars of the offence were specified in a schedule annexed to the order of sanction and the sanction directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under S. 161 of the Penal Code, "or any other section of the Code that may be found applicable to the offence" the order was held to be a sufficient sanction under this section.[5]

There is no prescribed form in which the sanction must be given.[6] So long as the sanction specifies with sufficient clearness the offence for which a prosecution is to be started, any deficiency or error in the particulars set out is immaterial.[7]

S. 197, Notes 9—11.

There is no restriction as to the officer to whom a sanction under this section should be addressed.[8] Nor is it necessary that a complaint based on a sanction issued under this section should be filed by the very officer to whom the sanction was addressed.[9] But where the sanction expressly specifies the person by whom the prosecution is to be instituted, it is not open to any other person to do so.[10]

A substantial compliance with the order directing a prosecution under this section is enough. Thus, where a District Magistrate was ordered to institute a prosecution against a certain person but he took cognizance of the case and transferred it to another Magistrate for trial, held that though taking cognizance was not identical with instituting a prosecution, the order of the Government had been substantially complied with and that the proceedings were not vitiated.[11]

The granting of a sanction under this section is an executive and not a judicial act.[12] The sanctioning authority is not authorised to hold a judicial inquiry before granting such sanction. An enquiry that the sanctioning authority makes will be only a department one.[13]

A sanction under this section being not a judicial act, it need not be based on legal evidence.[14] Nor is it necessary to give reasons for sanctioning a prosecution.[15] Similarly, it is not necessary before sanctioning a prosecution under this section to give the accused person an opportunity to show cause why his prosecution should not be ordered.[16]

10. Stage at which sanction is to be obtained.—The section requires the previous sanction of the Local Government for taking cognizance of an offence. Hence, a sanction obtained after the commencement of proceedings is not sufficient.[1]

11. Want of sanction—Effect.—The provisions of this section are mandatory and the absence of sanction in cases coming under the section will render the proceedings illegal.[1] But it has been held that where a case is committed to the Sessions in the absence of the sanction required by this section, the Sessions Court, can under S. 532 waive the defect and accept the commitment.[2] (As to further discussion on this subject, see Notes under S. 532.)

Where there are a number of co-accused in a case, the want of sanction in respect of one of them does not vitiate the proceedings as regards the rest.[3]

In the undermentioned case[4] it was held, that the proper course, when a complaint is presented without obtaining the sanction required by this section, is to dismiss the complaint under S. 203. As the section forbids a Court from taking cognizance of an offence in the absence of the sanction mentioned therein and as the dismissal of a complaint under S. 203, necessarily implies taking cognizance of the offence, it is submitted that the above view is not correct.

12. Sub-Section (2).—This sub-section empowers the Local Government in sanctioning a prosecution under this section to direct by whom and in what manner the prosecution is to be conducted, and to determine the offence or offences for which the accused is to be prosecuted and the Court before whom he is to be tried.[1] Where the Local Government has specified the Court by which a case is to be tried under this sub-section the High Court has no power to transfer the case to any other Court.[2] But the sub-section contemplates the Local Government making an order with reference to each particular case. The Local Government cannot pass a general order affecting a whole class of cases. Thus the Local Government cannot order that all cases in which a particular class of officers. (e.g., Thasildars) must be tried only by a particular Court.[3]

Under this sub-section the Local Government can direct a case to be tried by a Court which otherwise would have no local jurisdiction over it.[4] Where a case is directed by the Local Government to be tried by the Sessions Court of a certain place, the case can be tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of that place the reason being that though there can be only one Sessions Court for each Sessions Division there may be more than one Judge for each Sessions Court.[5]

142. * * * * * * * *

Nothing in this or in the last preceding section shall be held to authorize a Magistrate to take cognizance of a case without complaint, when the offence falls under Chapters XIX, XX or XXI of the Indian Penal Code; nor to entertain a complaint, or to take cognizance without complaint, of an offence, without sanction, where such offence, by any law in force, may not be entertained without sanction.

Complaint or sanction required in certain cases.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 68.)

68. Except as is otherwise provided in Chapter XI of this Act, the Magistrate of the District, or a Magistrate in charge of a division of a District, may, without any complaint, take cognizance of any offence which may come to his knowledge and may issue a summons, or in cases where a warrant may issue, a warrant of arrest against the person known or suspected to have committed such offence, in the same manner as if a complaint had been made against such person. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the offences described in Chapters XIX, XX and XXI of the Indian Penal Code.

Magistrate may take cognizance of offences without complaint made.

1. Scope and object of section.—The general rule is that any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence may set the law in motion by a complaint even though he is not a person injured by the offence. This section embodies one of the exceptions to this general rule.[1] The offences referred to in the section are of a private character and the object of the section is to limit the persons by whom proceedings can be initiated and to see that it is not in the power of any and everybody to drag such offences into a Court of justice.[2]

2. Abetment of offence mentioned in section—Applicability of section.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the section applies to the abetment of an offence mentioned in the section. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the section does not apply to such cases[1] while a contrary view has been held by the Chief Court of Punjab.[2]

3. Complaint—Essentials.—For the definition of complaint, see S. 4 (h), ante. [See also Notes under S. 190, ante.]

The definition of a complaint does not include the report of a Police-officer. But the fact that a complaint is made at the instance of the police does not make it other than a complaint for the purposes of this section.[1]

Statements made by a complainant in his evidence do not form part of the complaint.[2] But it has been held that the statements by the complainant during his examination under S. 200 form part of the complaint[3]. It is submitted that this view is not correct.

S. 198, Notes 3—4

In construing a complaint regard must be had to every portion of it.[4] It is not necessary that a complaint of defamation should make a specific reference to every exhibit proposed to be put in evidence.[5]

As to whether a complaint under this section must specify the section under which the offence falls, see Note 5, infra.

4. "Person aggrieved by such offence."—A complaint under this section can only be made by a person "aggrieved" by the offence complained of.[1-a] A merely fanciful or sentimental grievance will not make a person "aggrieved" within the meaning of this section. The grievance must be such as the law can appreciate. It must be a legal grievance and not a stat pro ratione voluntas reason.[1] Hence, the mere fact that a person has been pained in his mind by reason of an offence is not enough to enable him to complain under this section.[2]

But the expression is not confined to a person who is directly injured by the offence.[3] Nor is it confined to a person who would be entitled to compound the offence under S. 345 post.[4]

The question whether a person is "aggrieved" within the meaning of this section is a question of fact depending on the nature of the accusation and the special circumstances of each case.[5]

The case-law upon the matter may be summarised as follows:—

Defamation.—It is settled law that the right to complain about defamation belongs not only to the person defamed but also to others who are affected by the defamation.[6] Thus, the husband of a woman who has been defamed by the imputation of unchastity to her can complain about the defamation.[7] Similarly, other near relations of the woman to whom unchastity has been imputed are also

S. 198, Notes 4—5.

entitled to complain about the defamation.[8] But a person who is merely one whose feelings are hurt by the defamation of another is not "aggrieved" by the offence and cannot complain under this section.[9] The test has been laid down to be whether the complainant's own personal reputation has been harmed directly or indirectly.[10] Thus, imputations against the head of a religious sect which do not affect his spiritual character are not sufficient to justify a member of the sect to complain under this section.[11] Similarly, the official superior of the person defamed is not necessarily entitled to complain under this section though the imputation may touch the discharge of official duties by the person defamed.[12]

Where a class of persons (e.g., the students of a particular college) are defamed in such a way that the defamation can be brought home to the individual members of the class, any member of the class can complain.[12-a]

Bigamy, etc.—A complaint of bigamy can be preferred by the person with whom the second ceremony is gone through or the husband (by the first marriage) of the woman committing the bigamy.[13] But other relations of the parties have been held not entitled to complain. Thus the father,[14] mother,[15] or brother[16] of the first husband or of the second husband[17] or the father of the woman who contracts the bigamous marriage[18] has been held not competent to prefer a complaint of bigamy under this section. Similarly, the spiritual head of a community cannot complain about an offence committed in relation to the marriage of a member of the community.[19]

5. Want of complaint—Effect.—A complaint by an "aggrieved" person is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of any Court to deal judicially with the offences mentioned in this section. Judicial proceedings held in the absence of such complaint are illegal.[1] But it is not necessary that the complaint must specify the section under which the offence falls. It is enough if the complaint states the facts constituting the offence of which cognizance is proposed to be taken. (See Note 6.)

6. Complaint of one offence—Evidence disclosing different offence falling within section—Power of Court to proceed in respect of such offence.—Under S. 238, sub-S. (3) the power of convicting an accused person of an offence not expressly charged against him, in the circumstances specified in the section does not enable a Court to convict an accused person of an offence mentioned in this section (S. 198) in the absence of a complaint as required by it. Suppose a complaint is made by a person "aggrieved" within the meaning of the section in respect of a certain offence but that the evidence discloses a different offence coming within the purview of the section. Can the Court proceed in respect of such latter offence in these circumstances? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court,[1] the Punjab Chief Court[2] and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh[3] that the Court cannot proceed in respect of the offence. But a contrary view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court.[4] It is submitted that the latter view does not seem to be correct. But it is not necessary that the complaint must specify the section under which the offence falls. It is enough if the facts stated in the complaint amount to the offence in regard to which action is proposed to be taken.[5] [See also Notes under Ss. 199, 190, 195, 196, 238, etc.]

7. Power of appellate Court to alter finding.—It has been held that the power of an appellate Court under S. 423, infra, to alter a finding is not restricted by this section and that therefore an appellate Court can alter a conviction to one for any of the offences mentioned in this section notwithstanding the absence of any complaint as required by it.[1] [See also Notes under Ss. 423, 199, etc.]

8. Complaint on behalf of another—Proviso.—A complaint under this section must be made by the very person who professes to be aggrieved by the offence, except in cases coming under the proviso to the section. But the complaint need not be presented in person.[1]

Before the proviso to the section was inserted by Act, 18 of 1923 it was held that even where the aggrieved person was a minor or lunatic, a complaint could not be preferred on his behalf by another.[2] These decisions have been rendered obsolete by the proviso which provides that where the aggrieved person is a woman, who cannot be compelled to appear in public according to the manners and customs of the country or an idiot or lunatic or is from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint, some other person may complain on his behalf. But even in such cases, the leave of the Court is necessary before a complaint can be made on behalf of another. The absence of such leave will make the proceedings illegal.[3]

1. Scope and object of the section.—This section embodies one of the exceptions to the general rule that it is open to any person to institute a complaint of an offence. The object of the section is to see that in the case of offences which are purely of a private character the matter is not dragged to the Court except when the party immediately affected (husband or guardian) cares to bring the matter before the Courts.[1]

The pendency of a suit for divorce by the husband in which the offender has been joined as a co-respondent is no bar to a criminal prosecution by the husband under this section. Section 61 of the Divorce Act does not bar such prosecution.[2]

2. Offences to which section applies.—The section only applies to offences under Ss. 497 and 498 of the Penal Code. It does not apply to any other offence though the intention to commit an offence under S. 497 or S. 498 of the Penal Code may be an ingredient of the offence in the particular case. Thus, the section does not apply to the offence of house-trespass committed with intent to have illicit sexual intercourse (adultery) with the wife of the occupier or owner. Hence, the complaint of the husband or other person mentioned in this section is not necessary to enable a Court to take cognizance of such offence.[1] But the section applies to attempts to commit the offences mentioned therein.[2]

3. Complaint—Essentials.—A complaint under this section must be a complaint as defined in S. 4 (h).[1] Hence, an allegation made to the police is not sufficient for the purposes of this section.[2] Similarly, statements made by a person as a witness in the course of the inquiry or trial cannot be treated as a complaint under this section.[3] There is a difference of opinion as to whether the sworn statement of the complainant under S. 200 constitutes a complaint under this section.[4] It is submitted that the better view is that such statement cannot be held to be a complaint as it is made after a complaint is preferred and a Court takes cognizance on it. (See Notes under S. 190). S. 199, Notes 3—4.

4. Who can complain.—A complaint under this section, except in cases covered by the proviso can only be made by the husband of the woman, or during his absence, the person having care of the woman on his behalf.[1] No other person can complain. Thus, the husband's counsel as such has no right to complain under this section.[2]

Where a person professes to complain as the husband under this section, the factum and validity of the marriage must be proved strictly.[3] But it is enough if the married relationship exists on the date of the offence. The fact that the tie is broken subsequently will not deprive the husband of his right to complain under this section.[4]

If at the time of the commission of the offence, the husband of the woman is absent, a complaint under this section can be lodged by the person having care of the woman on behalf of the husband.[5] An express delegation of trust by the husband is not necessary to entitle a person having care of a woman during her husband's absence to complain under this section.[6] If an offence mentioned in this section is committed during the husband's absence, the person who had care of the woman when the offence was committed can complain under this section even though the husband is not absent at the time of making the complaint and is not anxious to prosecute.[7]

When a husband can be said to be "absent" within the meaning of this section is a question of fact. In the undermentioned case,[8] where the husband was living in the interior of a district while the wife was living with her father in the district headquarters, it was held that the husband could not be said to be absent within this section. The mere fact that the husband is ashamed to go to Court does not amount to absence of the husband.[9]

In the undermentioned case[10] it was held that absence under this section is absence from place and that therefore the husband's illness is not enough to entitle another to complain under this section. This view must be treated as obsolete now in view of the proviso which was added to the section by Act 18 of 1923 and which, in the case of the husband's sickness enables another person to complain on his behalf.

The section as amended by Act 18 of 1923 requires that the leave of the Court must be obtained before a person having care of a woman during her husband's absence can complain under this section.[11] But the leave may be implied and need not be expressly recorded.[12]

The introduction of the proviso by the amendments of 1923 renders obsolete the view that even in case the husband was sick, or a minor, a complaint under the section should only be made by him except when he was absent.[13] But in order to make the proviso applicable the circumstances which are alleged as bringing the case within its limits should be proved.[14] Further, the leave of the Court is necessary before the complaint of a person other than the husband can be entertained.[15] In the absence of such leave, the proceedings will be illegal.[16]

It is open to a convicted person to complain under this section if he is otherwise qualified to do so.[17]

5. Want of complaint—Effect.—Under this section the complaint of the husband or other person mentioned therein is a condition precedent to the Courts dealing with an offence under S. 497 or S. 498 of the Penal Code. In the absence of such complaint, the proceedings will be illegal.[1] It is not enough that the complaint is laid after the commencement of the proceedings.[2]

6. Proceedings commencing in respect of offence not falling under section—Evidence disclosing offence within section—Power of Court to convict for such offence.—It has been seen in the Notes under S. 190 that as a general rule, it is competent for any Court having seisin of the case relating to a criminal transaction to proceed in respect of the offence which on the materials before it appears to be involved in the transaction, irrespective of the offence in respect of which the proceedings may have been commenced. In proceeding in respect of an offence thus disclosed, a Court "takes cognizance of an offence".[1] Hence, in regard to offences falling under this section a Court cannot proceed in the above manner in the absence of a complaint by the husband or guardian of the woman in question as required by this section.[2] This principle which is in the nature of an exception to the general rule stated above is recognised in sub-S. (3) to S. 238.

Suppose the proceedings originally commenced on the complaint of the husband or other person mentioned in the section but the complaint related to an offence different from that which is eventually disclosed on the evidence and which falls within the purview of this section. In such a case, the question arises whether the original complaint filed by the husband or other person mentioned in the section will be sufficient even in respect of the offence subsequently disclosed. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. But the preponderant view is that the original complaint is not sufficient in such cases to enable the offence subsequently disclosed being taken cognizance of. According to this view, the word "complaint" in this section means a complaint in respect of the offence mentioned in this section and not complaint of any offence.[3]

But a contrary view was taken in the undermentioned case of the Calcutta High Court.[4]

Thus, though a complaint under this section must specifically relate to the particular offence which is proposed to be taken cognizance of, it is not necessary that it must specify the exact section under which the offence falls. It is enough if the facts alleged in the complaint make out an offence which is taken cognizance of.[5] Thus, a complaint which only mentions S. 366 of the Indian Penal Code, can be the basis of taking cognizance of an offence under S. 498 if the facts stated in the complaint are sufficient to constitute an offence under the latter section. This principle is based on the theory that it is for the Court and not the parties to determine the section applicable to a given set of facts.[6] (See also Notes under Ss. 190, 195, 196, 198 and 238.)

1. Legislative History.—

Changes introduced in 1872—

(1) The examination of the complainant under S. 66 of the Code of 1861 had to be reduced into writing in full while under S. 144 of the Code of 1872 it was enough if it was reduced into writing in a summary manner.

(2) The third para. of S. 144 was new and provided that no trial should be set aside on the ground of the omission to examine the complainant.

Changes introduced in the Code of 1882—

Section 200, para. 1 of the Code of 1882 re-enacted S. 144 of the Code of 1872 with the following material changes:—

(1) The words "a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint" were substituted for the words "when in order to the issuing of a summons or a warrant against any person for any offence a complaint is made". The words "taking cognizance of an offence" connote in a concise form, the receiving of the complaint as well as the competency of the Magistrate to receive it and the purposes for which the complaint is made.

(2) The words "at once" were new and added to indicate that the complainant must himself present the complaint so as to be examined.

S. 200, Notes 1—2.

(3) The words "on oath" were also new.

(4) The words "substance of" were substituted for the words "in a summary manner" for the purpose of making the meaning clear.

(5) The last para. of S. 144 was omitted in view of S. 537, newly enacted.

(6) Provisos (a) and (c) to S. 200 re-enacted in clearer terms the provision contained in S. 144, para. 2 of the Code of 1872.

(7) Proviso (b) to S. 200, incorporated in the Code, the provisions of S. 30 of Act V of 1877 relating to Presidency Magistrates, which was in force before the Code of 1882, in the Presidency Towns to which the Code of 1872 did not apply.

Changes introduced in 1898—

The words "subject to the provisions of S. 476" were added in the beginning of the section, in conformity to an amendment made in S. 476, to make unnecessary the examination of the officer of a Court, sending up a complaint, with reference to offences committed before such Court.

Changes introduced in 1923—

The words "Subject to the provisions of S. 476" were omitted; a new proviso (aa) was inserted in order to make it clear that the complainant need not be examined in any case where the complaint is made by a Court or a public servant acting in his official capacity.

Changes introduced in 1926—

S. 3 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act II of 1926 inserted the words "where the complaint is made in writing" after the words "thinks fit" in proviso (b) of the section.

2. Scope and object of the section.—The object of an examination under the section is threefold—

(1) to ascertain the facts constituting the offence, where they are not given in the written complaint[1] or to correct and elucidate doubtful points therein.[2] In such cases, it is the duty of the Magistrate even to explain to the complainant the procedure and then ask him to state definitely the charge he intends to make.[3]

(2) to separate unfounded from substantial cases even at the outset and to prevent innocent persons from being brought into police custody and subjected to the annoyance of frivolous charges[4] or in other words, "to prevent issue of process in cases where the examination of the complainant would show that the com-

(3) to help the Magistrate to judge if there are sufficient grounds calling for investigation and for proceeding with the case.[6]

This examination of the complainant is a very valuable safeguard that the Legislature has provided and must be strictly observed.[7]

The section applies exclusively to cases when a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on complaint under S. 190, Cl. (1) (a).[8] It does not therefore apply—

(1) when the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under S. 190-1 (b) and (c).[9]

(2) where no offence is disclosed as where an order is required to be made under S. 552, infra (power to compel restoration of abducted females.[10] It follows that where there is no complaint, no examination under this section or any further action is necessary or can take place and any prosecution started against the complainant on such examination would be illegal[11] though, where there is a complaint, any defect therein does not affect the validity of the subsequent proceedings, in the absence of failure of justice.[12]

A Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta is a Presidency Magistrate and he is governed by this section as to the examination of the complainant.[13]

plaint but submit them to himself, would be clearly illegal.[1] The District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try the case which has not been taken cognizance of by him, or has not been sent to him or withdrawn by him, in the proper way.[2]

4. Where Magistrate is not empowered to take cognizance.—As to the procedure to be adopted where a Magistrate is not empowered to take cognizance of an offence on complaint, see S. 201, infra.

As to the effect of a Magistrate, not empowered, erroneously and in good faith, taking cognizance of an offence on complaint, see S. 529 (e), infra.

5. "On complaint".—As to what is and what is not a "complaint". see S. 4 (h), supra and the Notes thereunder. A complaint is only in the nature of an indictment and should not be treated as if it had the sanctity of affidavit evidence.[1]

6. Stamp on complaint and written examination of the complainant.—See Sch. II, Art. 1 (b) of the Court-Fees Act, 1870.[1]

Where the examination of the complainant, for the first or only time under this section is reduced to writing, such written examination is liable to Court-fees, as provided by S. 18 of the Court-Fees Act, VII of 1870.

The Court may after the conviction of the accused order him to pay the complainant the fee paid on such complaint or written examination.[2]

Complaints however from a Public Servant, a Municipal Officer or an officer or servant of a Railway Company are exempt from any Court-fee under S. 19 of the Court-Fees Act[3] and the accused therefore in such cases are not liable on conviction to refund what was illegally levied from the complainants as such fees.[4]

7. Second complaint.—Where a complaint is dismissed or the accused is discharged, a second complaint for the same offence is not barred. (See S. 403). The Magistrate taking cognizance of such complaint should therefore proceed in the manner laid down under this section.[1]

8. Who may make a complaint.—See Notes under S. 4 (h) ante, and the undermentioned case.[1]

10. Whether Magistrate can refuse to entertain a complaint.—A Magistrate, competent to take cognizance of the offence complained of, cannot refuse to receive such complaint and proceed under this section.[1] Thus he cannot decline jurisdiction on the ground—

(1) that, if the complaint was entertained, it would tend to bring numerous other complaints and stir up old religious ill-feelings,[2] or

(2) that, the case is one in which though an offence is disclosed, a civil action also will lie and that the party may go to the Civil Court,[3] or

(3) that, the case is one in which the charge might also have been laid in the first instance before the Police[4], or

(4) that, the case—one of petty theft or assault—is also cognizable by the village Magistrate[5], or

(5) that, the complaint mentions a section of the Penal Code, while the offence alleged therein, falls under another section.[6]

A Magistrate should refuse to accept a complaint, in the following cases:—

(1) Where it is not signed by the complainant and not preferred in person or by a person duly authorised to prefer the specific complaint.[7]

(2) Where no offence is disclosed therein.[8]

11. Order on complaint.—Where a Magistrate takes cognisance of an offence on a complaint, the only manner in which he can dispose of it is to examine the complainant, on oath, and after holding such inquiry as he considers necessary under S. 202, make either an order of dismissal under S. 203 or issue process against the accused under S. 204.

A complaint cannot be said to have been legally disposed of by—

(1) taking no action thereon in view of the Police report and the order thereon,[1] or

(2) passing an order "shelving" the complaint[2], or

(3) passing an order "filing" the petition.[3]

A complaint being part of the records of a Magistrate's Court, should not be returned, to the party with the order endorsed thereon. The party is entitled only to a certified copy of such order.[4]

S. 200, Notes 12—13.

12. Who may present complaint.—The words "at once" in the section clearly indicate that, as a general rule a complaint should be presented in person by the complainant himself so that he may be examined as soon as the complaint is presented though under certain circumstances as for example, when the complainant is a pardanashin lady, the complaint may be permitted to be presented by a person duly authorised to prefer the specific complaint.[1]

The above rule however, applies only where a complaint is presented in person by the complainant or his agent and not when the complaint is received by post. It is competent to a Magistrate to receive and take action on complaints received by post but whether he will do so or not is a matter within his discretion.[2] So a complaint not presented in person but transmitted by post is not necessarily bad in law, and the Magistrate, if he takes action, may call upon the complainant to appear before him on a date to be fixed by him for examination on oath.[3]

13. "Shall examine".—The requirement as to the examination of the complainant is imperative and should be strictly complied with.[1] The substance of the examination, reduced to writing should be distinct from the complaint itself.[2] The examination is not to be a mere form, but must be a full and intelligent inquiry into the subject-matter of the complaint, carried far enough to enable the Magistrate to exercise his judgment and see if there is a prima facie case or sufficient ground for proceeding.[3] A diligent, proper and thorough examination, made in an intelligent and not in a perfunctory manner, will often show the complaint to be imaginary or unnecessary.[4] The examination should, however, be on facts which are within complainant's knowledge.[5] The examination should be a full and complete one even on the first examination though a sketchy examination on one day and a more complete one on another will not vitiate the whole trial.[6] The reason that the facts were fully set out in the written complaint, does not justify an omission to examine the complainant.[7] The mere putting of a question on the presentation of a complaint under S. 498 of the Penal Code as to where the complainant's wife was[8] or the cross-examination of the complainant on depositions recorded under S. 159 by another Magistrate[9] is not an examination under this section; nor is a mere attestation upon oath, that the terms of the complaint are true, sufficient compliance with the terms of this section.[10] The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind has, however, taken a contrary view and has held that such an attestation is sufficient.[11] It has purported to follow the undermentioned decision[12] of the High Court of Bombay, which however was a case of a complaint presented to a Presidency Magistrate who is not bound to examine on oath or to reduce such examination to writing.[13] It is submitted that the Sind view is not correct.

It is desirable that the substance of the oral examination should be read over to the complainant on the principle underlying S. 360 especially if it is to be utilised as the basis for a possible prosecution for perjury in the future.[14]

14. Right to be examined.—A complainant, as soon as he presents his complaint, is entitled to demand that his examination should be taken and reduced to writing before his complaint is disposed of.[1]

See Note 13, supra.

15. Refusing to answer.—"A complainant fulfils a duty where he informs a Court of an offence and it is not proper to examine him about his motives and force him to name the persons who had written the complaint for him, or helped him with legal advice, as if, in making a complaint, he has done something wrong" and where the complainant refuses to answer such irrelevant questions, he cannot be punished either under S. 485 of this Code or S. 179 of the Penal Code.[1]

16. Omission to examine complainant.—An omission to examine the complainant as required by this section is a serious irregularity. But this will not necessarily vitiate the proceedings. The question in such case will be whether the person objecting has been prejudiced by such irregularity. The accused cannot ordinarily complain of the irregularity, because the omission to take a sworn statement cannot prejudice him, as he has ample opportunities of cross-examining the complainant when he is examined in the case. In cases, therefore, where the accused person, after conviction complains of the omission to examine the complainant, such omission, will be cured by S. 537 (a) and will not ordinarily vitiate the trial or the conviction.[1] If, however, the objection is taken at an early stage action will be taken to set right the defect and to proceed with the case after the examination of the complainant.[2]

Where the complainant objects to the irregularity, the position is somewhat different. In cases which end in the conviction of the accused he cannot, of course, have any grievance[3] but where the complaint is dismissed without such examination[4] or on an improper examination[5] he is prejudiced by the procedure adopted and the order of dismissal will be set aside.

17. Examination before the case is transferred under S. 192.— Under the Code of 1861, there was a conflict of decisions, as to whether a transfer of a case to another Magistrate, without examination of the complainant under S. 66, was with or without jurisdiction, the Allahabad High Court holding the view that he has no jurisdiction[1] the Calcutta High Court, after a great deal of conflict in its own decisions, finally holding that he has.[2]

The Code of 1872 however provided in S. 44, para. 2, an option to the Magistrate transferring a case, to examine the complainant or not, which provision is now embodied in proviso (a). So now where, the complaint is made in writing, the Magistrate in cases where he is transferring the case under S. 192, is not required to examine the complainant.[3] But he is not precluded from making such examination in which case the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred need not examine the complainant again. See Note 28.

18. Examination where complaint is by Court or public servant — Proviso (aa).—Before the Code of 1898 there was no express provision exempting the Court or public servant making a complaint, from being examined under the section. The High Court of Allahabad, however, held that such an examination was not necessary.[1] While the High Court of Madras held that the non-examination was only an irregularity curable by S. 537.[2]

With a view to remove misconception on the point, the Legislature in the Code of 1898, enacted in sub-S. (2) to S. 476, that the Magistrate shall, upon receiving the case for inquiry or trial, proceed according to law and as if upon complaint made and recorded under S. 200. At the same time, it amended S. 200, and prefixed to it the words "Subject to the provisions of S. 476"[3] thus giving legislative effect to the Allahabad view as regards complaints by Courts.[4]

This still left the cases of complaints by public servants under S. 195 in doubt and Courts got over this difficulty by holding that the non-examination of the complainant, was cured by S. 537 and did not vitiate the trial.[5] With the object of removing all doubts whatever and to make it clear that public servants preferring complaints need not be examined, the section was amended in 1923 by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, by omitting the words "subject to the provisions of S. 476" and by inserting the new proviso (aa). The words "in writing" were also introduced after the word 'complaint' in S. 195.[6]

It is now therefore clear that, in cases of complaints by a Court[7] or by a public servant purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties[8] no examination is necessary under this section.

the provisions of this section and allowed an opportunity of substantiating the charge which he made originally to the police and which was reported as false.[1] S. 200, Notes 21—23.

22. Commission for examination.—Section 503, infra, provides for the examination of witnesses on commission where they cannot be examined in Court, without an amount of delay, expense, or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable.

The question whether that section applies to the examination of a complainant under this section, if the circumstances stated therein apply, depends upon the question whether he can be regarded as a witness. There is a conflict of decisions on the point. The Allahabad High Court[1] and the Punjab Chief Court[2] have held that in the earlier stage of the proceeding, a complainant is not a witness but only a complainant, and that therefore a commission for his examination cannot be issued under S. 503, which applies only to witnesses. The Calcutta High Court, on the other hand, has held that a complainant is a "witness" and that a commission can be issued to him under S. 503.[3] No reference has, however, been made in the decision to the rulings of the Allahabad High Court and the Punjab Chief Court. It is submitted that the Calcutta view is not correct. The examination of the complainant is not made in the presence of the accused, and cannot be used as "evidence" against him.[4]

The word "evidence" under the Evidence Act means statements made before the Court by witnesses. It seems to follow from this that a complainant at the stage of examination under this section is not a witness, and cannot come under S. 503.

23. "Upon oath".—The examination of the complainant should be on oath. The question whether he could be examined on solemn affirmation depends upon the question whether he is a witness within the meaning of S. 6 of the Oaths Act. As has been seen already in Note 22 above, there is a conflict of opinion on the point.

The words "upon oath" were for the first time introduced in the Code of 1882, though in so far as the Presidency Towns were concerned, there was an option given for taking the examination on oath, under S. 30 of Act, IV of 1877. The evident object of getting the substance of the examination on oath and signed by him, is to use it against him if needed, in a prosecution for perjury.[1] In a case where the statement of the complainant was not on oath and before a Magistrate, the conviction was quashed.[2]

This section does not authorise a Magistrate to administer an oath but merely recognises his power to do so.[3]

As to whether the examination should be on oath or not, when the complaint is to a Presidency Magistrate, see Note 27, infra.

24. Shall be reduced to writing.—The substance of the examination of the complainant, is required to be reduced to writing[1] except in the case in proviso (b) as to which, see Note 27, infra.

The written examination must be and is intended to be distinct from the complaint.[2] In the following cases under the Code of 1861 the omission to reduce to writing the examination of the complainant was held to be an illegality which vitiated all the proceedings taken subsequently.[3]

25. "Shall be signed".—The examination of the complainant on oath should be signed both by the complainant[1] and by the Magistrate. The object of getting the signature of the complainant is to make use of it, if need be, in proceedings against him, under S. 193 of the Penal Code.[2] A statement not so signed cannot be used as evidence in such a prosecution.[3] Where A was convicted under S. 193 of the Penal Code in respect of his contradictory statements, one of which was made in the course of his examination under this section but such statement was not signed by him it was held that the conviction should be quashed.[4]

The failure of the Magistrate to sign the examination would only be an irregularity curable by S. 537.[5] S. 200, Notes 25—28.

A refusal to sign the substance of the examination taken down under this section is punishable under S. 180 of the Penal Code.

26. Oral complaints.—When the complaint is an oral one, the Magistrate must, even in cases in which he intends to transfer the case under S. 192, examine the complainant.

See also Note 27.

27. Presidency Magistrate.—Proviso (b) provides certain exceptions to the general rule prescribed in the section in cases where the complaint is before a Presidency Magistrate:—

(1) The examination of the complainant may be on oath or not as the Magistrate thinks fit.[1]

(2) Where the complaint is in writing the examination need not be reduced to writing.[2]

(3) Where the complaint is oral, the Magistrate may require it to be reduced to writing.

As the section stood before 1926, a Presidency Magistrate need not record the substance of the examination even if the complaint was not made in writing.[3] The words "where the complaint is made in writing" were newly added by the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act (II of 1926).

28. Shall not be bound to re-examine.—A complainant should be examined either by the Magistrate receiving the complaint, or by the Magistrate to whom he has transferred the case.[1] Under the proviso (c) if the Magistrate who had received the complaint had examined the complainant before transfer, the Magistrate who receives the case by transfer, need not re-examine the complainant. He can issue process on the examination already made.[2] If the complaint has been transferred without such examination, the Magistrate receiving it by transfer cannot issue process without examining the complainant.[3]

LEGISLATIVE CHANGES	1
SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2
MAGISTRATE NOT COMPETENT	3
"SHALL RETURN"	4
ORAL COMPLAINTS	5

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1872—

There was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section. The provision contained in sub-S. (1) of this section was newly inserted as S. 145 in the Code of 1872.

Changes introduced in 1882—

S. 145 of the Code of 1872 applied to all complaints oral as well as written. S. 201 of the Code of 1882 limited the section to complaints made in writing.

Changes introduced in 1898—

Sub-S. (2) has been newly added to the Code of 1898.

2. Scope of the section.—A Magistrate, when he receives a complaint under S. 190 is either competent to take cognisance of the case or he is not. This section deals with the procedure to be adopted where he is not competent to take cognisance of the case.

As to the procedure to be adopted in cases where the Magistrate is competent to take cognisance of the case but finds during the course of the enquiry or trial, that he is not competent to inquire or try further, see Ss. 346, 347, 348 and Ch. XXXII of the Code.

3. Magistrate not competent.—A Magistrate may not be competent to take cognisance of a case for several reasons. Thus he cannot take cognisance of a case where

(1) he has no local jurisdiction in respect of it.[1-a]

(2) he has no jurisdiction over the person of the accused as in the case of an European British subject under S. 29-A or of a Juvenile offender under S. 29-B.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 145.)

Procedure by Magistrate not empowered to hear complaint.

145. If the Magistrate be not competent to receive the complaint, he shall refer the complainant to a Magistrate having jurisdiction.

(3) he is not empowered to try it under Schedule II, Col. 8 of the Code or,

(4) he is barred from trying it by the provisions of any special or local law under S. 29.

(5) sanction is necessary under Ss. 132, and 196 to 199 and the same has not been obtained.

(6) he is not empowered under S. 190.

(7) he is not empowered to commit for trial to a Court of Session under S. 206, or

(8) he has no jurisdiction over the offence of rape by a husband under S. 561.

Before the amending Act of 1923 the want of sanction under S. 195 of the Code where such sanction was necessary, was a bar to a Magistrate entertaining a complaint.[1] The amending Act has abolished the necessity for sanction in cases coming under S. 195 and therefore where there is a complaint in writing under the amended S. 476, the Magistrate is not incompetent to take cognisance of the same, if he had jurisdiction otherwise.

The question of jurisdiction in the above cases must be decided at the outset by a perusal of the complaint. It is on the terms of the complaint, that the Magistrate first has to inform himself as to the nature of the case and see whether from the allegations made in the complaint he has jurisdiction to entertain it.[2] This question the Magistrate himself must decide and should not seek or act on the advice of any other District or superior Magistrate.[3]

A Magistrate could not refuse, to take cognisance of a case, on any of the following grounds:—

(1) that though he is entitled to take cognisance of the charges named in the complaint, he is not entitled to take cognisance of a charge not named in the complaint but which could be made out from the allegations in the complaint.[4]

(2) that the offence merited greater punishment than he is empowered to inflict.[5]

(3) that the offence is a petty one cognisable by the Head of the village.[6]

4. "Shall return."—Where a Magistrate finds, he is not competent to take cognisance of a case on a complaint made in writing to him, he shall return the complaint to be presented to the proper Court having jurisdiction, with an endorsement to that effect.[1] He need not and should not examine the

Postponement of issue of process.

146. If the Magistrate sees cause to distrust the truth of the complaint, he may postpone the issuing of the process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and may direct a previous inquiry or investigation to be made into the truth of the complaint, either by means of any officer, subordinate to such Magistrate, or of a local Police-officer, or in such other mode as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint.

If such inquiry or investigation is made by means of some person other than an officer exercising any of the powers of a Magistrate or a Police-officer, such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Act on an officer in charge of a Police-station, except that he shall have no power to make an arrest.

Postponement of issue of process.

May dismiss the complaint.

180. If the Magistrate sees cause to distrust the truth of the complaint, he may postpone the issuing of process for causing the attendance of the person complained against, and direct a previous enquiry to be made into the truth of the complaint, either by means of any officer subordinate to such Magistrate, or of a local Police-officer, or in such other mode as he shall judge most proper, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. If such enquiry is made by means of some person other than an officer exercising any of the powers of a Magistrate or a Police-officer, such person shall exercise all the powers vested by this Act in an officer in charge of a Police-station, except that he shall have no power to make an arrest.

1. Legislative History.—

Changes made in 1869—

Under S. 180 of the Code of 1861, this provision was limited to cases triable by a Court of Session only.[1] Act, VIII of 1869, extended it to all cases.[2]

Changes made in the Code of 1872—

Under the Code of 1861 a Magistrate could direct an inquiry only while under the Code of 1872 he could also direct an investigation.

Changes made in the Code of 1882—

Section 202 of the Code of 1882 introduced many important changes:—

(1) The word 'Magistrate' which was general was limited to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Magistrate of the first or second class, and any other Presidency Magistrate specially authorised.

(2) The words "of an offence of which he is authorised to take cognizance" were added after the word complaint in order to restrict the scope of the word complaint to complaints of offences.

(3) The words "when the complainant has been examined" were newly added.

(4) The words "record his reasons for distrusting the truth of the complaint" were newly added and as a consequential change the words "sees cause to distrust" were changed into "sees reason to distrust."

(5) The words "and either inquire into the case himself or" were newly added.

(6) The words "direct a previous inquiry or investigation" were omitted and the words "direct a previous local investigation" were substituted thus taking away the power of inquiry except by himself. As a consequential change the words "inquiry or" were omitted in para. 2, also.

(7) The words "or by such other person not being a Magistrate or Police-officer" were substituted for the words "or in such other mode".

(8) The third para. which ran as "this section applies to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay" was newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898—

There was only one important change introduced in the Code in 1898. The words 'is not satisfied as to' were substituted for the words "sees reason to distrust".

Changes made in 1923—

The Criminal Procedure Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 made the following important changes:—

(1) The words 'any Magistrate' were substituted for the words "The Chief Presidency Magistrate . . . first or second class".

(2) The words "or which has been transferred to him under S. 192" are new.

(3) The words "if he thinks fit" have been substituted for words "if the Magistrate is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint in order to widen the scope of the section".

(4) The words "inquiry or investigation" have been re-inserted for the words "previous local investigation." This change, also is made in para. 2, as a consequence.

(5) The words "any Magistrate subordinate to him" have been substituted for the words "any officer subordinate to such Magistrate".

(6) The words "when the complainant has been examined" were omitted and a proviso was added as follows:—

"Provided that no such direction shall be made (a) unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of S. 200 or (b) where the complaint has been made by a Court under the provisions of this Code".

(7) Sub-S. (2-A) was newly added,

Changes made in 1926—

By the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, II of 1926, the proviso of 1923, was altered into the present proviso.

S. 202, Note 2.

2. Scope and object of the section.—Under this section a Magistrate who has taken cognizance of an offence or upon a transfer made to him under S. 192, may postpone the issue of process to the accused person in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the complaint. This he can do either by enquiry into it himself or by directing an inquiry or investigation by a Magistrate subordinate to him or by any Police-officer or any other person.

The scope of Chap. XVI of the Code which contains this section is to separate unfounded from substantial cases even at the outset[1] and as such, the object of an inquiry or investigation under this section is to ensure that no person shall be compelled to answer a criminal charge unless the Court is satisfied that there is a prima facie case for proceeding and issuing a process against the accused person.[2] Such an inquiry or investigation is designed to afford the Court an opportunity of either confirming or removing any hesitation it may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the inquiry varies with the circumstances of each case and it is certainly not contemplated that it should be exhaustive. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and depth of the enquiry is entirely in the discretion of the Magistrate. The provision is enabling and not obligatory. As soon as the Magistrate has satisfied himself, that process should issue, its object is fulfilled.[3] The inquiry is not intended to supersede a regular trial.[4]

It is not necessary that a Magistrate should call for an inquiry under this section in every case. It is only when he thinks fit, that he may do so.[5] But it is generally advisable that an enquiry be held where the complainant is not speaking from his own knowledge.[6]

Where, however, such an inquiry is made obligatory as under S. 10 of the Child Marriage Restraint Act of 1929, the failure to do so vitiates the whole trial.[7]

A Magistrate acting under this section can only consider the report of any inquiry or investigation directed by him[8] and not any report made previously and not directed by him[9] or an inquest report made by another Magistrate under S. 176[10] or any previous departmental inquiry.[11] The purpose of the inquiry under this section being only to decide whether to issue process to the accused or not, it is not competent for the Magistrate to treat the evidence recorded in such an inquiry as evidence in the case and forthwith put the accused on his defence and convict him.[12]

3. "Any Magistrate".—The section as it stood before the amendment of 1923, permitted only the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Presidency Magistrates authorised in this behalf and any Magistrate of the first and second class only to act under this section. But now the use of the words 'any Magistrate' removes the restrictions on Third Class Magistrates and Presidency Magistrates. Now any Magistrate authorised to take cognizance of a complaint or to whom a case is transferred under S. 192 can act under this section.

4. Presidency Magistrates.—Before 1923, a Presidency Magistrate (other than the Chief Presidency Magistrate) not empowered by the Local Government, could not direct a local investigation under this section.[1] In Madras, the Local Government had invested all Presidency Magistrates with such power. Now, no such special vesting of power is necessary.

Where Presidency Magistrates have been declared by the Local Government under S. 21, sub-S. (2) to be subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate can, by virtue of S. 18, Cl. (4) make over a complaint to an ordinary Presidency Magistrate for inquiry and report under this section.[2]

5. Complaint of an offence.—The section, by its terms, applies only to cases where a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on complaint under S. 190-1-(a) and not otherwise.[1]

Therefore a Magistrate cannot direct an inquiry or investigation under this section in the following cases:—

(1) Cases in which he takes cognizance of the offence on a Police report, S. 190-1 (b)[2] or on information, S. 109-1 (c).[3]

(2) Petition under S. 107, which is not a complaint of an offence at all.[4] A Magistrate however in this case, has the right to call for a report from the Police, apart from the provisions of this section.[5] See Notes to S. 107, also.

(3) Petition under S. 488 for maintenance which is not a complaint of any offence.[6]

6. Complaint by Court or public servant.—Where the complaint is by a Court, it was formerly held that the Magistrate had no power to act under this section because there was already an inquiry and the accused was sent in custody under S. 476 and there was no issue of process to be postponed.[1] The proviso Cl. (b) of the amendment of 1923 also specifically made action under this section unnecessary.

This was found to cause many difficulties; also, cases might arise in which an inquiry or investigation should be made before a person is put on trial. Therefore the Legislature again by Act, II of 1926, amended the proviso, under which now, an inquiry or investigation may be directed even in the case of a complaint by a Court under S. 476.

As regards a complaint by a public servant, the section does not make any difference. The Magistrate has just as much right to investigate preliminarily under this section, whether the complaint is filed by a public servant or by any one else.[2]

7. "Authorised to take cognizance".—A Magistrate cannot act under this section unless he has authority to take cognizance of the offence mentioned in the complaint. Thus a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence mentioned in S. 197 without the previous sanction of the Local Government and where he receives a complaint without such sanction, he cannot send the case to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry under this section.[1]

8. "Transferred to him under S. 192."—These words are new and were added by the Amendment Act of 1923 "to cover cases which have been transferred to a Magistrate under S. 192 as well as cases of which he has taker cognizance himself".[1] Before this amendment it was held that a Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred for disposal had no jurisdiction to direct an inquiry or investigation under this section.[2] Now this is no longer law and a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred can act under this section.

9. "May if he thinks fit."—Under the Codes of 1872 and 1882, it was held that a Magistrate could not act under this section without discrimination[1] and unless he "sees cause or reason to distrust the truth of the complaint".[2] The Code of 1898 gave a little more latitude to the Magistrate's discretion and a Magistrate could act under this section if he was "not satisfied as to the truth of a complaint".[3] Even these words were considered too narrow and by the amendment of 1923 the Magistrate could act under this section on any ground "he thinks fit". It is thus entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate whether or not an inquiry or investigation under this section should be ordered.[4] A complainant has no right to require his complaint to be forwarded to the Police[5] or another Magistrate for investigation or inquiry.

10. "For reasons to be recorded in writing".—Where the Magistrate in any case in which he thinks fit, decides to act under this section, he is bound to record his reasons for doing so in writing.[1] As to the effect of a failure to so record the reasons, see Note 24, infra.

11. "Postpone the issue of process".—An order under this section is one by virtue of which the Magistrate decides to postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the accused person, where, for any reason that he thinks fit, he wishes to hold an inquiry or direct an inquiry or investigation into the complaint. He can do this therefore only before process is issued. A

Magistrate therefore, who after issue of process[1] or when the accused is brought under a warrant[2] or after taking evidence[3] holds an inquiry or directs an inquiry or investigation, acts in contravention of the section. After the issue of process he must proceed with the trial. This rule applies equally to the successor of a Magistrate who has issued the process.[4]

Under certain circumstances, however, a Magistrate may properly direct an inquiry under this section even after the issue of process. Where, after the Magistrate issued processes against two accused, if one of them lays a cross-complaint, the Magistrate can properly rescind the order to issue process and send the cases to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report.[5]

When once the Magistrate postpones the issue of process, under this section, he is required to inquire into the case himself or to direct an inquiry or investigation. The fact that there was already a police investigation does not affect his proceedings.[6] Similarly where the Magistrate directs an inquiry under this section, he cannot issue process before he receives the report of the inquiry.[7]

12. Position of the accused.—A person complained against does not become an accused until it has been decided to issue process against him, and he is not entitled to be represented by a pleader during the preliminary enquiry which may be held under this section. If he chooses to attend the proceedings he may, of course, do so like any other member of the public but he has no locus standi as a party, the purpose of the law being clearly to exclude him until sufficient ground for proceeding against him has been made out by the complainant.[1] Proceedings under this section are not proceedings inter partes but they are instituted and conducted by the Magistrate in order that he may be able to satisfy himself whether there is or is not, any ground for issuing process and it is not until process is issued that the matter becomes a case.[2] Therefore the practice of issuing a notice to the accused before the issue of process[3] or of conducting the inquiry in his presence[4] or of hearing arguments on behalf of the accused[5] or of examining him[6] is undesirable and quite irregular and contrary to the spirit of the section and to the general principles of the Code, though such a procedure is not prohibited by the strict letter of the section[7] or may make the inquiry more complete and sometimes satisfy the Magistrate that the case is false.[8] However, if such a procedure is followed by the Magistrate he is not thereby committing an illegality.[9]

13. May inquire into the case himself or direct an inquiry or investigation.—Under this section as it stood before the amendment in 1923 a Magistrate must himself conduct the inquiry and cannot direct an inquiry to be made by any Subordinate Magistrate or a Police-officer or other person. These persons could only hold a local investigation.[1] But in Amrit Majhi v. Emperor[2] a doubt was raised whether the language of the section did not seem consistent with the long existing practice of referring complaints to Subordinate Magistrates for inquiry and report.

The amendment of 1923, now expressly empowers a Magistrate to direct an inquiry under this section to a Magistrate subordinate to him or an investigation to a Police-officer or such other person as he thinks fit, thus expressly adopting the view held in Amrit Majhi's Case.[3] A third Class Magistrate however, even under the amended section, must inquire into the case himself and has no power to direct any inquiry or investigation.

S. 202. Notes 13—15.

Under this section, a Magistrate has the option of only one out of the two alternatives, namely, either to inquire into the case himself or direct an inquiry or investigation. He cannot have recourse to both. Where therefore a Magistrate chose to inquire into the case himself it was held that he could not direct a local investigation.[4] Similarly where he has ordered an investigation by another person, he cannot follow it up by an inquiry himself.[5] But it has been held in the Calcutta High Court that a Magistrate, if he is dissatisfied with the result of an investigation directed by him, may hold an inquiry himself.[6]

An inquiry under the section can be directed only to a Subordinate Magistrate and not to a superior Magistrate[7] or a Magistrate of the same class.[8]

The Subordinate Magistrate directed to inquire, need not be competent to entertain the complaint, he is asked to inquire into, provided the Magistrate who directs the inquiry is competent to entertain and dispose of the same.[9]

Once a Magistrate has directed an inquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate under this section, he cannot recall the proceedings before the inquiry is completed.[10] But it has been held that he can stay the proceedings.[11]

14. "Inquiry."—The inquiry contemplated by this section does not necessarily mean an inquiry by examining witnesses, or by holding an investigation into the case or in any particular form. The Magistrate can do it in any way he thinks proper.[1] He is at perfect liberty to look into the police-records and if he is satisfied that the complaint is groundless, he can dismiss the complaint.[2] But where he examines witnesses in such an inquiry and evidence which is opposed to the complainant's allegations is brought before him he should give an opportunity to the complainant to explain or to meet such evidence.[3] It is in the discretion of the Magistrate to allow the complainant to be represented by a vakil or not in such an inquiry.[4]

15. Evidence in the inquiry—Sub-S. (2-A).—The evidence in an inquiry held under this section need not be confined to the examination of the complainant alone. The section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate to examine such witnesses and make such enquiries as he thinks fit.[1] There is nothing to prohibit him from examining witnesses whom he knows to be able to throw light on the matter or from importing even his own personal knowledge into it.[2]

Where a Magistrate enquiring into a case under this section examines witnesses, he may, under sub-S. (2-A), if he thinks fit, take the evidence of such witnesses on oath. This provision was added by the Amendment Act of 1923 to put an end to the long existing conflict of views as to whether such an inquiry is a judicial proceeding within the meaning of S. 476 so as to make the complainant liable to prosecution for making a false complaint or for perjury. The Calcutta[3] and Patna[4] High Courts held that such an inquiry was a judicial proceeding while the Madras High Court held that it was not.[5] The Lahore High Court doubted if it was a judicial proceeding.[6] The present sub-S. (2-A) gives effect to the Calcutta and Patna view and the Madras view is no longer correct. An inquiry under this section therefore is now a judicial proceeding.[7]

16. Magistrate holding inquiry, if disqualified from trying.—There is nothing in the Code which disqualifies a Magistrate who holds a preliminary inquiry under this section from trying the case himself when there is nothing to indicate that he initiated or directed the proceedings or took any personal interest in the matter of the complaint presented before him.[1] The fact that a Subordinate Magistrate expressed his opinion in submitting a report, in a case referred to him under this section, is no bar to his holding the trial on an order by the District Magistrate making over the case to him for the purpose.[2]

17. Investigation.—A Magistrate, may, if he thinks fit, direct an investigation by a Police-officer or by any other person for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. Before the amendment of 1923, the Magistrate could direct a local investigation even by a Subordinate Magistrate; but now see S. 4-1 (l).

The words "local investigation" were not restricted to the investigation of the physical features only but meant an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the complaint. The word 'local' was used with a view to hold the investigation in the locality for the convenience of the parties but the investigation was not confined to the investigation of the locality itself.[1] This is also evident from the definition of the term in S. 4-1 (l) of the Code where the investigation by way of collection of evidence is to be conducted by a Police-officer or by any person other than a Magistrate. A local investigation therefore is merely a proceeding for the collection of evidence on the spot for the purpose of ascertaining if the complaint is true or false.[2] It can be ordered when there is a quarrel about boundaries or any matter of that kind.[3] S. 202, Notes 17—18.

The word 'local' has been deleted in 1923 indicating clearly that the investigation is not confined to mere inspection of the locality.

18. "Investigation by police."—

(1) Trivial and non-cognizable cases.—It is not advisable for Magistrates to make indiscriminate use of police agency for the purpose of ascertaining matters as to which they are bound to form their own opinion.[1-a] This is specially so in cases regarding offences not cognizable by the police.[1]

Similarly in trivial cases also except for special reasons, one or the other modes of inquiry permitted by the section should be adopted[2] as it is an abuse of the powers given by this section to refer such petty cases (e. g., an assault of a petty character) to the police for inquiry, the proper course for Magistrates in such cases is to take action on the complaint at once.[3]

(2) Cognizable cases.—A police investigation under this section is different from the investigation referred to in S. 156 ante. A Magistrate in cognizable cases, after he has taken cognizance of an offence under S. 190-1 (a) (i.e., on complaint) can only order an investigation and report under this section but cannot order an inquiry under S. 156, and direct the police to submit a charge-sheet. That means a Magistrate, cannot proceed under Chapter XIV after acting under Chapter XVI.[4] When a complaint is referred under this section by the Magistrate for investigation, the police need no more than make a report,[5] but this does not debar them from exercising their ordinary powers of arrest and investigation and from sending up the accused for trial under a charge-sheet.[6] The decision of the Bombay High Court in the following case[7] holding that the police are debarred from doing so, was dissented from and disapproved in the Madras, Lahore and Sind cases referred to above and, it is submitted, is not correct.

(3) Where the accused is a Police-officer.—If the accused is himself a Police-officer, it is not proper nor is it contemplated that the Magistrate should call for a report from the Police-officer, who is himself the accused[8] or from a superior or other Police-officer.[9] In such cases the Magistrate himself should hold the inquiry[10] or direct a local inquiry by a Magistrate.[11] Complaints against Police-officers should be handled with the greatest care. In such cases, the complainant should be given every facility to prove his allegations.[12]

It is not desirable that a complaint against a person who is alleged to have acted in collusion with the police should be handed over to the police for investigation.[12-a]

(4) Report.—The report called for under this section, should form part of the record[13] and as such a copy thereof can be given to the accused.[14] The report should be submitted to the same Magistrate who had ordered the investigation and not to another Magistrate.[15]

19. 'Such other person.'—The Magistrate may direct an investigation by such other person as he thinks fit. A clerk can be so directed.[1] 'Such other person' under this section includes a panchayat within the meaning of the U. P. Village Panchayat Act.[2] A master is not a fit person to be directed to investigate and make a report in a case of complaint against his servant.[3]

It is illegal for a Magistrate to call upon the accused himself to make a report and act upon it.[4]

S. 202, Notes 19—21.

20. Examination of the complainant—Proviso.—The proviso to sub-S. 1 makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to examine the complainant on oath, before directing an inquiry or investigation under this section save in the case where the complaint is by a Court. Under this section before it was amended in 1923 such an examination was a pre-requisite, whether the Magistrate intended to make a personal inquiry himself or whether he intended to make a direction for an inquiry or investigation. The present proviso requires such examination to be made only where a direction for enquiry is to be made and not where the Magistrate intends to make a personal inquiry himself.

A complaint therefore cannot be sent for inquiry or investigation unless the complainant has been examined on oath[1] and if any report of such an enquiry or investigation is called for without such examination, and is made, it is without jurisdiction and cannot form the basis of any further action and a complainant who was not examined cannot be prosecuted with regard to his complaint, dismissed on such a report.[2]

21. Powers of the inquiring or investigating officer.—

1. A Magistrate inquiring into a case can exercise all the powers of a Magistrate including the power of taking evidence of witnesses on oath. But he has not the powers of a Police-officer to keep an accused in custody for the purpose of an inquiry.[1]

2. A Police-officer making an investigation under this section has all the powers conferred on him under Chapter XIV. He

1. The omission of the Magistrate to record reasons for postponing issue of process.[2]
2. Requiring the accused to attend at the enquiry or his examination thereat, and allowing of cross examination and arguments inter parties.[3]

(2) the result of any investigation or inquiry under S. 202[5] and anything outside it must be discarded.[5-a]

S. 203, Notes 1—2.

Thus the Court cannot consider the statements of witnesses examined by the Police[5-b] or the evidence adduced in a counter case[5-c] or the result of a Police inquiry not ordered by the Magistrate[5-d] or on the result of an inquiry on a previous petition[5-e] or on the result of investigation ordered under S. 202 but not held in compliance with its terms[5-f] again the Court cannot ordinarily permit the opposite party to appear and argue that process should not issue. Where, however, the complainant has obtained an order for the seizure of the opposite party's books and for restraining him from operating on his banking account, the opposite party can appear and ask that such orders should be vacated.[6] Where a complaint relates to an offence for the prosecution of which previous sanction under S. 197 is necessary it has been held that the proper procedure where such sanction does not exist is to dismiss the complaint under this section.[6-a] (See Notes under S. 197).

This section does not apply to complaints under the Merchant Shipping Act (XXI of 1923) which cannot therefore be dismissed under this section.[7]

2. "May dismiss the complaint".—Where a complaint is made to a Magistrate he has either to dismiss it under this section or issue process under S. 204, infra.[1] He cannot pass any other kind of order. Thus he cannot direct the Police to submit a charge-sheet to some other Magistrate[2] or submit the complaint to the District Magistrate, after disbelieving the complaint.[3]

Where a Magistrate, dismisses a complaint under this section, there must be a specific order to that effect.[4]

The following orders have been held to be dismissals of complaints under this section:—

S. 203, Notes 2—4.

(1) An order refusing to issue process on a complaint.[5]

(2) An endorsement on a complaint. "Enter as false no prosecution".[6]

(3) An order staying proceedings against some accused while proceeding with the case against others; in this case there is dismissal of the complaint so far as the foremen are concerned.[7]

(4) An order holding the complaint to be false and calling upon the complainant to show cause against his prosecution.[8]

The following orders have been held not to be dismissals of complaints under this section:—

(1) Where a charge is made to the Police and is repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate, and the Magistrate passes a departmental order to the Police "show as false" but no order is passed on the complaint itself.[9]

(2) A direction to the Police after a complaint was referred to them that the complaint may be struck off the Police file.[10]

(3) An order expunging a charge from the list of reported offences.[11] In this case there is no complaint at all to be dismissed.

(4) An endorsement on the complaint "Notice is discharged".[12]

(5) A refusal to take cognizance of an offence for want of sanction under S. 195.[13]

(6) An order that the "accused is warned".[14]

(7) An order of reference to arbitration, as it is not in the powers of a Magistrate to make such a reference.[15]

(8) An order withdrawing process once issued.[15-a]

3. Magistrate.—The word "Magistrate" must mean a Magistrate to which the Code applies. The Code does not apply to proceedings before Village Magistrates. (See S. 1, ante) and a dismissal by such Magistrate of such a proceeding is not dismissal of a complaint under this section.[1]

4. Orders on complaint not to be delayed.—There is nothing in the Code to show that the Magistrate must, at once, consider the complaint.[1] He must, however, pass orders as expeditiously as possible; it will be improper to delay the passing of orders for months.[2] As to the disposal of counter complaints, see the undermentioned case.[3]

5. 'Sufficient ground for proceeding'.—The question whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding must, as has been seen in Note 1, already, be based upon the materials referred to in the section namely, the statement on oath of the complainant and the result of any investigation or inquiry under S. 202. Where the facts alleged in the complaint constitute an offence and there are no circumstances apparent in the examination of the complainant, such as contradictions, variations, or serious and unexplained delay in instituting proceedings, justifying the Court in concluding that the complaint is false there would be a prima facie case for proceeding.[1] Where, on the other hand the allegations contained in the complaint and in the complainant's oral statement, disclose no criminal offence,[2] or are self-contradictory so as to be self-destructive or are physically impossible or involve an extreme degree of improbability, and so forth; as well as in cases, in which the allegations made, though nothing can be said a priori of their possibility or probability, are practically incapable of proof, there can be no sufficient ground for proceeding.[2-a]

Where the complaint shows only a civil dispute as to title or as to other Civil claims the Criminal Court ought not to deal with them but should dismiss the complaint.[3] The dividing line between Criminal and Civil liability is sometimes indistinguishable and the Magistrate should thoroughly examine the complainant to see if any criminal offence is made out.[4] If the allegations disclose a criminal offence the complaint ought not to be dismissed even if a civil remedy is obtainable.[5]

A Magistrate cannot dismiss a case off-hand unless a prima facie case of any kind is not made out.[5-a] Where a prima facie case is made out, the following are not sufficient grounds on which a complaint can be dismissed:—

(1) The fact that besides the complainant, other persons could complain against an accused.[6]

(2) The fact that a libellous publication complained of is a mere republication.[7]

(3) The withdrawal of the complaint by the complainant in a warrant case which is non-compoundable.[8]

(4) The absence of personal injury to the complainant and the complainant being a mere tool of another person.[9]

(5) The fact that the complainant had no personal knowledge of the facts of the complaint.[10]

(6) The fact that the complainant is of low caste.[11]

(7) The fact that the charge might be laid to the Police in the first instance.[12]

(9) The fact that there is no possibility of a conviction.[14]

(10) The fact that the person complained against has been exonerated in a previous departmental inquiry in which the complainant has no concern.[15]

(11) The fact that the complaint is cognizable by another Magistrate.[16]

(13) Reasons arising out of the Magistrate's own personal knowledge of the affair, or conjecture, or out of knowledge acquired prior to the making of the complaint.[18]

(14) The fact that the result of the proceeding would be undesirable or the motive or conduct of the complainant are discreditable or malicious.[19]

(15) The fact that a previous complaint has been dismissed under S. 259.[20]

A complainant has a right to an adjudication on the point whether there is a sufficient ground for proceeding before his complaint is dismissed.[21] The decision whether there is sufficient ground for dismissing a complaint must be reached by the exercise of discretion based on judicial considerations.[22]

6. Who can dismiss a complaint.—

Under this section a complaint may be dismissed by—

(1) the Magistrate before whom a complaint is made,

(2) the Magistrate to whom it has been transferred,[1]

(3) the successor of the Magistrate who recorded the complaint and ordered inquiry.[1-a]

S. 203, Notes 6—7.

Even if the complaint is transferred to a superior Magistrate solely for the purpose of transferring it to another, the Magistrate to whom it is sent for transfer, can dismiss a complaint under this section.[2]

The Magistrate to whom the complaint is transferred, cannot however dismiss the complaint without giving notice to the complainant, of such transfer.[3]

7. Effect of dismissal.—A dismissal of a complaint after hearing the complainant and after considering the result of an investigation under S. 202 amounts to a legal determination of the complaint[1-a] and the complainant can be prosecuted for making a false charge under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code.[1] But until a complaint is dismissed under this section or otherwise disposed of, no proceedings can be taken under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code.[2] This rule is not based on any statute but is only a precautionary rule of safety in respect of prosecutions under S. 182 or S. 211 of the Penal Code. So while a prosecution under those sections, might, in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with the practice, this practice could per se, be no ground for setting aside a conviction under S. 211 or S. 182, before the disposal of the case.[3]

A mere dismissal under this section, does not afford a ground for proceeding under S. 211.[4] The complainant must be afforded an opportunity to prove his case before being prosecuted under S. 211 or S. 182;[5] but where he has had such an opportunity, and the dismissal of the complaint is made only after hearing him and taking such steps as are prescribed by the Code, it cannot be comes up for examination of the complainant, it is clear that an order dismissing the complaint is justified.[3]

9. "And the result of the investigation or inquiry (if any) into S. 202".—Where an inquiry is ordered under S. 202, and in that inquiry the complainant says that he has witnesses to prove his case, he should be given an opportunity of proving his case, before the complaint is dismissed on the basis of the result of such inquiry.[1] But where in such inquiry the complainant declines to prove his case ex parte, it cannot be said that the Magistrate is wrong in dismissing the complaint under this section.[2]

Where the inquiry ordered under S. 202, is found to have been insufficient, the Court of revision may set aside the dismissal of the complaint based on the result of such inquiry, and may order a further inquiry.[3] In complaints against Police-officers and other Government Official it would be a proper exercise of discretion if the Magistrate orders an inquiry into the matter giving the complainant every opportunity to prove his allegations.[4]

The words "if any" clearly show, that this section empowers the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without any investigation or inquiry under S. 202, ante, if after examining the complainant he considers there is no sufficient reason for proceeding.[5]

The words "if any" were omitted from the Code under the Amending Act of 1923, but were restored again to the section by an Amending Act in 1926. The reasons for re-insertion are given in the statement of objects and reasons of the 1926 Amending Act as follows: "The Calcutta High Court in a recent decision (in the case of Srish Chandra Bose v. Modan Lal Surma,) has held that under S. 203, an investigation or an inquiry under S. 202, is necessary in all cases, because the words "if any" have been omitted from S. 203, after the words "investigation or inquiry." No such change was intended by the Amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923 and the proposed addition is made to clear this matter".

[But see (1935) 36 Cri. L. Jour. 1035 (1035) (All.), Ram Gir v. Ravi Saran Singh (Dismissal of complaint without examining complainant was mere irregularity).]

S. 203, Notes 10—14.

10. Shall record his reasons for so doing.—A Magistrate should record his reasons for dismissing a complaint under this section.[1] The object of this requirement is to enable the High Court, to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate has been properly exercised or not.[2] This is an imperative provision of law and where no reasons are recorded, the order of dismissal is without jurisdiction.[3]

It has been held that reasons stated in a Police report on the basis of which an order of dismissal is made, are sufficient if the report itself is part of the order.[4]

11. Second Complaint.—A dismissal under this section is a dismissal without trial. As to whether such a dismissal, is a bar to the re-hearing of the complaint or to the entertainment of a second complaint, see S. 403, infra, and Notes thereunder.

12. Further inquiry.—As to ordering of a "further inquiry" into a complaint dismissed under this section, see Note 9, above and S. 436, infra and Notes thereto.

13. Abatement.—S. 306, of the Succession Act, 1925, (S. 89 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881), provides that "all demands whatsoever and rights to prosecute or defend any action or special proceeding existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease survive to and against his executors or administrators; except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party; and except also cases where after the death of the party the relief sought could not be enjoyed or granting it would be nugatory."

It has been held that this section has no application to criminal prosecutions and that such prosecutions do not abate by reason of the death of the person injured or of the complainant.[1]

14. Appeal.—Under S. 404, no appeal will lie from any order, unless specifically provided for by the Code and no appeal is provided from an order of dismissal under this section. Further inquiry alone is provided for in S. 436.

OF THE COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES.

S. 204. 204. (1) If in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence, there is sufficient ground for proceeding, and the case appears to be one in which, according to the fourth column of the second schedule, a summons should issue in the first instance, he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the accused. If the case appears to be one in which, according to that column a warrant should issue in the first instance, he may issue a warrant, or, if he thinks fit, a summons, for causing the accused to be brought or to appear at a certain time before such Magistrate or (if he has not jurisdiction himself) some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Issue of process.

CHAPTER XVII.

Of the commencement of Proceedings before Magistrates.

204. If, in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence, there is sufficient ground for proceeding, and the case appears to be one in which, according to the fourth column of the second schedule, a summons should issue in the first instance, he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the accused. If the case appears to be one in which, according to that column, a warrant should issue in the first instance, he may issue a warrant, or, if he thinks fit, a summons for causing the accused to be brought or to appear at a certain time before such Magistrate or some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Issue of process.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of section 90.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 147, Para. 3, Ss. 148 and 149.)

147. * * * *

If it appears to such Magistrate that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he shall, if the case appears to be a summons case, issue his summons, or, if the case appears to be a warrant case, his warrant, for causing the accused person to appear before himself or some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Issue of process.

148. SCOPE OF THE SECTION	2

Magistrate may issue his summons directed to such person, requiring him to appear at a certain time and place before such Magistrate to answer to the complaint.

If the Magistrate believes that the accused person is about to abscond, he may, instead of issuing a summons, issue a warrant in the first instance for the arrest of such person.

In what cases warrant may issue on complaint.

149. When a complaint is made before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, that any person has committed, or is suspected of having committed, any offence triable by such Magistrate and punishable with imprisonment for a period exceeding six months, or when a complaint is made before any Magistrate empowered to commit persons for trial before the Court of Session, that any person has committed, or is suspected of having committed, any offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, or which in the opinion of such Magistrate ought to be tried by the Court of Session, such Magistrate may issue his warrant to arrest such person, or, if he thinks fit, his summons requiring him to appear to answer such complaint.

Magistrate how to proceed on complaint.

67. The Magistrate before whom such complaint is duly made shall, if it appear to him that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, issue his summons, or in cases in which a warrant may issue, his warrant for causing the person accused to appear before himself or some other Magistrate having jurisdiction.

CHAPTER XIV.

Of cases triable by the Magistrate in which a warrant on complaint may issue.

Cases in which Magistrate may issue a warrant.

Summons instead of warrant.

248. When a complaint is made before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed any offence triable by such Magistrate, and punishable under the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a period exceeding six months, it shall be lawful for such Magistrate to issue his warrant to apprehend such person. Provided that in any such case the Magistrate, to whom such complaint shall be made, may, for any sufficient reason, instead of issuing his warrant in the first instance, issue his summons, requiring the person complained against to appear to answer to such complaint.

CHAPTER XV.

Of cases triable by the Magistrate in which a summons on complaint shall ordinarily issue.

Summons shall issue.

257. Whenever a complaint is made before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, that any person has committed or is suspected to have committed any offence triable by such Magistrate and punishable under the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months, it shall be lawful for such Magistrate to issue his summons directed to such person, stating shortly the matter of such complaint, and requiring him to appear at a certain time and place before such Magistrate to answer to the complaint.

When warrant may issue.

Provided that, if the Magistrate shall be satisfied or have reason to believe that the accused person is about to abscond, he may, instead of issuing a summons, issue his warrant in the first instance for the arrest of such accused person.

1. Legislative changes.—

(1) The words "if he has not jurisdiction himself" in sub-S. (1) are new.

(2) Sub-S. (3) is new.

2. Scope of the section.—Where the Magistrate does not dismiss the complaint under S. 203, supra but is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he has to commence proceedings against the accused by compelling his attendance before the Court. This section relates to the procedure for effecting such attendance.[1]

The Magistrate, under this section is empowered to issue summons to an accused in summons cases. In warrant cases, he may issue a warrant, or if he thinks fit, summons only; this is the only section authorising any Magistrate to issue such process to an accused, whether he takes cognizance on a private complaint or on a police report[2] or any information or knowledge other than a complaint or police-report.[3] This section applies where the Magistrate takes cognizance of offences not only under the Indian Penal Code but under any law other than the Penal Code.[4]

3. Magistrate taking cognizance only can issue process.—S. 190, ante, mentions the ordinary ways in which a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence. Unless he 'takes cognizance' as specified therein a process cannot be issued under this section.[1] A 'Magistrate taking cognizance' on a complaint is the officer who has heard the complaint made. He is the proper officer to issue a process because it is he who can best exercise a discretion with regard to the prima facie merits of the complaint.[2] Therefore, a District or superior Magistrate cannot order process to issue when a joint or subordinate Magistrate to whom a case has been made over for disposal[3] or who has taken cognizance of the complaint[4] has failed or refused to issue process but has not disposed of the case. If he wants to do so, he must remove the case to his own file and then issue process.

Under this section a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S. 192 after the examination of the complainant can issue process though he has not himself examined the complainant.[4-a]

Although it is only the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the offence who may direct issue of a process, a Magistrate, who is the "presiding officer" within the meaning of Ss. 68 and 75 supra may sign the process, even if he may not have taken cognizance of the offence and directed issue of the process.[5]

4. The Magistrate must have taken cognizance of an offence.—It is only a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence that can issue a process under this section. Where, therefore, no offence has been committed but the Magistrate gets information as to the possibility of an offence being committed the matter is only one for the interference of the police, and not one for the Magistrate to issue process.[1]

If, on a complaint, it should appear to the Court that the act imputed amounted to an offence under the Indian Penal Code or any other Penal law in force, it is the duty of the Court to proceed with the matter, even if a civil suit would be an appropriate remedy.[2] But where the acts as alleged do not disclose any offence it will be an abuse of the process of the Court, to allow criminal proceedings to proceed.[3]

S. 204, Notes 4—5.

An application for maintenance under S. 488 infra is not a complaint in respect of any offence and therefore a Magistrate dealing with it cannot dismiss it under sub-S. (3) of this section.[4]

Even where an offence is disclosed there must be definite evidence of an offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate receiving the complaint.[5] The Court is not limited to the sections or offences mentioned in the complaint. The fact that the complainant did not specifically and in terms accuse any one under any section of the Code, does not matter, if the facts stated in the complaint and his sworn statement, constitute an offence, triable by the Magistrate who receives the complaint.[6]

5. "Sufficient ground for proceeding".—A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence is bound to issue process under this section only if, in his opinion, there is sufficient ground for proceeding.[1] The stage at which the sufficiency of the ground for proceeding is to be considered, is, in the case of a complaint, after the examination of the complainant under S. 200 ante.[2] If the facts alleged in the complaint and the complainant's statement show a sufficient ground for proceeding process should issue[3] otherwise not.[4] It is not necessary in all cases that before issuing process, the Magistrate should have held any inquiry.[5]

A prima facie case means that there is sufficient ground for proceeding.[6] Where therefore a prima facie case is made out, the Magistrate should issue process[7] even if he considers that a civil remedy is more appropriate.[8] It was however held in the undermentioned case[8-a] that even if there was a prima facie case the Magistrate may in his discretion refuse to issue process. S. 204, Note 5.

There cannot be said to be sufficient grounds in the following cases for issue of process:—

1. Where the complaint is made on information and not on personal knowledge.[9] In such cases the Court should satisfy itself on inquiry that there is a case for the issue of process.[10]
2. Where the allegations made in the complaint are not substantiated by the statement on oath.[11]
3. Where the allegations disclose a dispute purely of a civil nature.[12]

The following are not sufficient grounds for refusing issue of process:—

(a) Where a prima facie case, is made out but in the Magistrate's opinion there is no chance of conviction and no useful purpose will be served by the enquiry.[13]

(b) Avoidance of religious ill-feeling.[14]

(c) The fact that the offence is cognizable by the police in the first instance.[15]

(d) The fact that the Magistrate thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction though the fact that another person accused upon the same facts for the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into consideration in determining whether upon the materials before the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding.[16]

Where from the examination of the complainant it appears that there is reason for the issue of process against all the accused, the Magistrate should not refuse to issue process against some of the accused and issue process only against the others. He must issue process against all.[17]

Stay of proceedings.—The practice of rushing into Criminal Courts when civil proceedings are pending should be discouraged and the result of such a pending suit should be awaited before proceeding.[18] But this rule is not a strict rule of law, but only a rule dictated by prudence and its application must depend on the merits of each case.[19] Similarly where there were two counter complaints, the Magistrate was justified in staying proceedings in one pending the disposal of the other.[20]

6. "In the opinion of the Magistrate."—In deciding on the sufficiency of the ground for proceeding, the Magistrate must be guided by his own independent opinion and not by that of others such as Police-officer.[1]

7. Issue of process.—This section provides that, when a Magistrate who receives a complaint neither dismisses it under S. 203 nor postpones issue of process under S. 202 process for the attendance of the accused shall issue.[1] The use of the word shall with reference to a summons and may with reference to warrants indicates that ordinarily a summons shall be issued in the first instance in all cases. Even in warrant cases the Magistrate, may, in his discretion issue a summons in the first instance instead of a warrant.[2] This discretion should be so used as not to subject accused persons to the indignity of arrest unless there is real need for it.[3]

If the Magistrate issues a warrant in a case in which he ought to have issued summons, the error is not a ground for setting aside the proceedings.[4] The Magistrate in such cases can cancel the warrant and issue a summons.[5]

Process should ordinarily issue against all the accused who are prima facie shown to have committed an offence and a Magistrate will be exercising a wrong discretion if he were to issue process to some only and not to all of the accused named in the complaint[6] though in proper cases, there is nothing irregular or illegal for a Magistrate to issue process piecemeal for the various accused persons.[7] The Magistrate however, is not bound, when the police-report discloses one offender only, to issue process against any witnesses, who may afterwards, be found during trial to be accomplices.[8] S. 204, Notes 7—8.

When once the Magistrate issues process under this section, proceeding commences and it should go on in due course unless something occurs to show that the Magistrate has for some cause or other, made a wrong exercise of his discretion.[9] The question of commencement of proceedings becomes relevant in suits for damages for malicious prosecution or for prosecution for giving false complaint, etc. Prosecution commences when proceedings commence under this section and proceedings commence when process is issued against the accused. So unless process is issued, there is no cause of action in either of the proceedings referred to above.[10] The view that a prosecution commences even when a complaint is made[11] is, it is submitted, not well founded and is not an accepted one.

Where A and B are jointly accused of an offence but the Magistrate issues process only against A, B is competent to give evidence as a witness at the trial of A.[12]

8. Omission to issue process.—Where a Magistrate without issuing any process at all to the accused, convicts him, the conviction is illegal.[1] But where the accused appears in Court of his own accord, without a summons, he is entitled to require that the case be proceeded with and the mere omission to issue summons becomes immaterial in such a case.[2]

S. 204, Notes 9—15.

9. Notice if a "process."—A mere notice to the person complained against that a preliminary enquiry will be held does not amount to a summons. The issue of such a notice is neither contemplated by the Code nor included in the forms in Schedule V.[1]

10. Order directing summons if a judgment.—An order directing issue of summons under this section is not a judgment. So where a Magistrate issued summons to an accused and the accused appeared and filed a cross-complaint, it was held that it was open to the Magistrate to rescind the order as to summons and send the complaints for enquiry under S. 202.[1]

11. Order directing summons if can be recalled.—An order issuing summons under this section, not being a judgment within the provisions of S. 369 infra there is nothing in the Code which forbids the Magistrate to reconsider such order on sufficient ground and recall the summons.[1]

12. "If he has not jurisdiction himself."—A process is for attendance of the accused before the Magistrate issuing it; but there are cases where the Magistrate issuing process has no jurisdiction to try the case as for example under S. 29-A supra in cases of complaint against an European British subject. Provision is made here, for the attendance of the accused, in such cases, before another Magistrate having jurisdiction.

13. "Some other Magistrate having jurisdiction."—"Some other Magistrate having jurisdiction" means having jurisdiction to enquire into and try the case, the power to take cognizance being distinct from jurisdiction.

14. "Provisions of S. 90"—Sub-S. (2).—See Notes to S. 90, supra.

That section provides for the issue of warrant in lieu of or in addition to summons, in summons cases, under circumstances stated therein.

15. Process fee.—Sub-Section (3) is new and enables a Magistrate to dismiss a case for default of payment of such fees for process as are payable and ordered, within a reasonable time. Even before this provision was inserted there existed the practice of dismissing the complaint for non-payment of process fees, as one for default of prosecution[1] though such a dismissal was held to be illegal in warrant cases.[2] The legislature has given effect to that practice by the addition of this sub-section.

Where a complaint was against two persons, but the complainant paid process fees for summons against one only, the other must be discharged, under this sub-section, if no summons is taken against him.[3]

S. 204, Note 15.

The process fee referred to in this sub-section is only for the attendance of the accused at the commencement of proceedings and cannot be ordered for the presence of the accused on the date of judgment and a dismissal of the complaint under this sub-section for non-payment of process fees for such summons is not legal.[4]

Ordinarily, under this section the complainant must pay process fee only for summoning the accused in all cases.[5] In cases of private complaints, the Court, could insist upon the complainant paying not only the process fees for summoning the witnesses but also their diet money and travelling expenses under the head "other fees payable" before issuing process for them.[6] In the case of a non-cognizable warrant case, neither the complainant nor the accused can be compelled to pay process fees for witnesses though the complainant must pay process fees for summoning the accused.[7]

The section applies to Magistrates taking cognizance of offences and this rule as to payment of process-fees, refers therefor only to cases when an 'offence' is disclosed. An application for maintenance under S. 488 should not be dismissed under this sub-section, for failure to pay process-fees, as an order for maintenance is not a conviction for an offence.[8]

Where a complaint was dismissed under this sub-section in a de novo trial after charges had already been framed it was held that it amounted merely to a discharge and not an acquittal, and that a second trial on same facts would not be barred.[9] See further S. 403 infra.

Where a complaint is dismissed under this sub-section, the High Court, Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may under S. 436 direct a further enquiry and in such a case notice to show cause why a further enquiry should not be ordered, is neither desirable nor necessary.[10]

Where on the date fixed, a Magistrate is unable to record evidence and he has to adjourn the case, the witnesses should be given notice to appear on the adjourned date and a party should not be required to repeatedly summon his witnesses on payment of process fees. A dismissal of the complaint for default under this sub-section when the Magistrate fails to give such notice is not justifiable.[11]

As to the fees payable, see S. 20 of the Court-Fees Act, VII of 1870, and rules framed by the High Courts thereunder.

16. Revision.—The High Court has ample revisional powers to interfere with the proceedings under this section and can exercise its powers at any stage of the proceedings and quash the same, though it will interfere only in cases of an exceptional nature as where neither the complaint nor the prosecution disclosed a case against the accused, but process has been issued under the section.[1]

Where a Magistrate, having followed the procedure laid down, has exercised a discretion judicially, in issuing a process[2] or where the error, omission, or irregularity in the issue of process is one which is curable under S. 537 infra[3] the High Court will not interfere.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced in 1872—

Under the Code of 1861, it was doubtful where the Court could dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in cases in which a warrant was ordinarily issuable on complaint. Section 151 of

---

But the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case may, in his discretion, at any stage of the proceedings, direct the personal attendance of the accused, and, if necessary, enforce such attendance in manner hereinbefore provided.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 151.)

151. In cases, of whatever nature, in which the Magistrate thinks fit to issue a summons, he may, if he sees sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused person, and permit him to appear by an agent duly authorized to act in his behalf.

Magistrate may dispense with personal attendance of accused.

But it shall be in the discretion of such Magistrate, at any stage of the proceedings, to direct the personal attendance of the accused person.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 261.)

261. The Magistrate may, if he sees sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of the person complained against, and permit him to appear by an Agent duly authorized to act in his behalf. Provided that it shall be at the discretion of the Magistrate at any stage of the proceedings to direct the personal attendance of such person.. When the personal attendance of the accused person during the trial has been dispensed with, the sentence of the Magistrate, if the sentence be for fine only, may be pronounced in the presence of the Agent if the accused person has been permitted to appear by Agent, or the accused person may be required to attend to hear such sentence.

Magistrate may dispense with personal attendance of accused.

the Code of 1872 made it clear that the Court could do so "in cases of whatever nature in which the Magistrate thinks fit to issue a summons".

Changes introduced in 1882—

(1) The words "in cases of whatever nature" of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "whenever.....issues a summons".

(2) The words "by his pleader" were substituted for the words by an agent duly authorised. This is consequent on the definition of "pleader" newly added to the Code of 1882 in S. 4 (n). That definition included any person duly authorised.

(3) The words "and if necessary.....provided" were newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898—

The section remains unchanged since 1882.

2. Scope.—The general principle of the Code is that an accused person cannot be proceeded against ex parte.[1] This section provides an exception to this general rule by enacting that the Magistrate may dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in a particular class of cases, namely those in which he issues a summons. At any stage of the proceedings, however, the Magistrate enquiring into, or trying the case can direct the personal attendance of the accused if his presence is found necessary.

This section applies only to Magistrates and not to Courts of Session or the High Court. But S. 353, infra shows that the latter Courts have got similar power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused.[2] The High Court can also under its inherent powers recognised by S. 561-A, dispense with such attendance.[3] See also S. 116, ante and S. 540-A, infra.

3. "Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons".—The section applies only when a Magistrate has issued a summons. It does not therefore apply where a warrant has been issued[1] or the accused has been arrested without a warrant.[2] Where, however, a summons has been issued in the first instance and thereafter the accused is brought in under a warrant of arrest, the section would apply.[3] A summons can under S. 204, ante, be issued even in cases in which a warrant is ordinarily issuable; this section will apply even to such cases if a summons has been issued.[4] Even where a warrant has been issued, the Magistrate may cancel the warrant and issue a summons, in which case, this section will become applicable.[5]

4. "Dispense with".—The words "may, if he sees reason so to do" show that the Magistrate has a discretion to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused or not as he thinks fit. The discretion will, however, be used liberally especially in trivial cases such as a prosecution for a municipal offence,[1] or where the accused is a pardanashin lady[2] or where the accused is too ill to attend Court.[3] In such cases if the permission is refused, reasons for such refusal should be recorded.[3-a]

A Magistrate can dispense with the personal attendance of the accused as often as he pleases.[4]

It is not necessary that there should be an express order dispensing with the personal attendance. But it is advisable that the fact should be noted in the records and not be left for implication.[5]

5. Bond from the accused.—Where the personal attendance of an accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond, may be taken from him binding him to appear either in person or by pleader, and if the pleader neglects to attend when the case is called on, the bond may be forfeited and the accused made liable for the payment of the penalty. The bond cannot be taken from his pleader nor can his pleader be bound by such a bond to attend.[1]

6. Pardanashin lady.—Where a Magistrate issues a summons to a pardanashin woman who is accused of an offence, he should, as a general rule, dispense with her personal attendance and permit her to appear by pleader at least until such time as he has before him some legal and satisfactory evidence indicative of her having committed a breach of the law.[1] Such an order should not be refused merely because—

S. 205, Notes 6—7.

(1) the Magistrate thinks that she is not pardanashin.[2]

(2) other women belonging to the same class that observed pardah had appeared in Court.[3]

(3) she is the daughter of a prostitute, if she is married to a respectable husband in whose family women observe pardah.[4]

The Court will extend the privilege of pardah to women who though not strictly pardah, are yet not accustomed generally to appear before the public.[5] This section is one which should be freely utilised in Sindh where so much prejudice exists against the appearance of females generally in public.[6]

As to the right of a pardanashin woman to be exempted from personal attendance.

(1) where she is a complainant, see S. 200, supra.

(2) where she is a witness, Ss. 503 and 506, infra.

7. "Permit him to appear by his pleader".—Although the personal attendance of the accused may be dispensed with under this section, it is essential that he should be represented by his pleader. The reason is that it is necessary that some one should be present at the trial to look after the interests of the accused, and the law considers that such interests will be completely safeguarded if his pleader is in attendance.[1]

The words "appear by pleader" in their ordinary acceptance mean "represented by pleader", that is, having a pleader to act and to plead.[2]

The appearance by a pleader involves the performance of all acts that devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial[3] such as the following:—

(1) pleading guilty or not guilty under S. 255 and in cases falling under Ss. 242 and 243,[4]

(2) filing a written statement embodying the plea of the accused.[5]

(3) making the necessary answers to an examination under S. 342,[6]

(4) hearing a deposition of a witness read over, under S. 360 (1),[7]

(5) hearing of a judgment, the sentence being one of fine or acquittal under S. 366 (2).[8]

Form No. 1 of Schedule 5 of the Code, shows that the summons to an accused person, may itself direct whether the accused is to appear in person or by pleader. In other words, the Magistrate may, even at the time of issuing summons, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused and permit him to appear by pleader.[9] When a summons is sent as in Form No. 1 of Schedule V, containing the words "you are hereby required to appear in person or by pleader" and the accused sends his pleader who requests for permission to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, the Magistrate, cannot proceed against the accused for disobedience of the summons even though he refuses to grant the permission. If he wants his personal attendance, an order directing such attendance should be made.[10]

The power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused can be exercised by the Magistrate only so far as his own Court is concerned. He cannot, for instance, grant or refuse permission to appear through a pleader in the Sessions Court to which he commits the accused.[11]

8. "Pleader".—Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the Court could, when dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused, permit him to appear by an agent duly authorised.[1] Under the present Code, the Court can permit him to appear only by his pleader. But the definition of the word "pleader" as now given in S. 4 (r) ante, is very wide and includes any person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to act in the proceedings against him.[2] In order that a person, other than a pleader authorised by law to practise in the Court, should be a "pleader" within the meaning of S. 4 (r), it is necessary that

(1) he should have been appointed by the accused to act for him, and

(2) the Court should permit him to so act.

The appointment and the permission need not however be express but may be implied from the circumstances of the case.[2-a]

Where the father-in-law of the accused who was unwell appeared in Court on her behalf and the trying Magistrate thereupon proceeded with the case, it was assumed that the Magistrate must have given the necessary permission.[3]

It is however generally advisable that something should be noted on the record to show that the person who represents the accused has been duly appointed by him and the Court has given the requisite permission for his appearance in place of the accused.[4]

In the absence of an appointment by the accused of any person to represent him, the mere permission of the Magistrate will not entitle any person to act as a pleader for the accused, and the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to proceed with the case in the absence of the accused.[5]

Illustrations.

(1) X, the estate agent of the accused appeared in Court and was permitted by the Magistrate to represent the accused. It was, however, not clear that he was appointed by the accused to act for him in the proceeding, it was held that the accused could not be convicted on the plea of "guilty" made by the agent.[6]

(2) The accused, a woman, was absent from her village and apparently without her knowledge, her mother-in-law appeared in Court on her behalf and was permitted to act for the accused. It was held that the conviction was not sustainable.[7]

9. Applicability to security proceedings.—This section applies to proceedings under S. 106 in Chapter VIII-A for the reason that the person against whom the proceedings are taken is an accused person. But it does not apply to proceedings under Ss. 107 to 110, in Chapter VIII-B.[1] Inasmuch as, in such proceedings, the persons proceeded against are not accused persons. But independently of this section, S. 116 provides for dispensing with the personal attendance of the persons proceeded against in such cases.

10. At any stage of the proceeding.—Where the Court has allowed the accused to appear by pleader, but thinks it necessary or desirable that the accused should be present in person for any particular purpose, such as for examination by the Court under S. 342 or for pleading to a charge under S. 255, he may order the personal appearance of the accused.[1] Where the accused is convicted and the sentence is not one of fine only, the Magistrate must, under S. 366, sub-S. (2), direct the personal attendance of the accused for hearing the judgment.[2] Though at any time, the Magistrate can revoke the permission given to the accused to appear by a pleader, yet he should not do so in a trivial case such as an Income-Tax prosecution and on a trivial ground such as that the accused objects to the case being tried by that Magistrate and wants a transfer of his case to some other Magistrate.[3]

11. Revision.—Where the Magistrate, has refused to excuse the personal attendance of an accused person, the High Court will in proper cases interfere in revision and will dispense with his presence.[1] S. 205, Note 11.

The High Court will not, however, interfere where the irregularity alleged is the mere omission of the Magistrate to make a record that he has given permission to the accused to appear by his pleader,[2] or where the case itself is an extremely trivial one.[3]

But where there is a complete absence of jurisdiction as where the Magistrate dispenses with the presence of the accused in a case in which a warrant has been issued, the High Court will set aside the order giving such permission.[4]

(CODE OF 1872—S. 143.)

143. The Magistrate of the District, any Magistrate of a Division of a District, any Magistrate of the first class, or, any Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf, may commit any person to the Court of Session for any offence triable by such Court.

Who may commit for trial.

(CODE OF 1861—Ss. 37 and 38.)

37. It shall be competent to the Magistrate of the District, or to any other officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate, to hold the preliminary enquiry into any cases triable by a Supreme Court of Judicature, and to commit or hold to bail persons to take their trial before such Court, and to exercise all the powers necessary for such purpose.

Commitment for trial before Supreme Court.

38. The Local Government may empower any Subordinate Magistrate of the first or second class not vested with such power by any law for the time being in force, to hold the preliminary enquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session, or by any Supreme Court of Judicature, and may empower such Subordinate Magistrate to commit, or hold to bail, persons to take their trial before such Court of Session or Supreme Court, and to exercise all the powers necessary for such purpose.

Subordinate Magistrate may be empowered to prepare cases for trial before the Court of Session or Supreme Court.

1. Chapter XVIII—General.—S. 193 ante provides that a Sessions Judge can take cognizance of a case in the exercise of his original jurisdiction only when the accused has been committed for trial before him. S. 194 ante provides that the High Court may take cognizance of offences upon commitment made to it. This chapter specifies the Magistrates who may pass orders of committal; and prescribes the procedure to be followed by them for the purpose.

The inquiry prescribed by the Chapter is called a preliminary inquiry; and before a Magistrate commits a case for trial to a Sessions Court he must hold such a preliminary inquiry into the facts alleged against the accused[1] and satisfy himself that there is a real case for trial.[2]

The object of such an inquiry is twofold. Firstly, in order to prevent the committal of cases in which there is no reasonable ground of conviction, so as, on the one hand, to save the accused from the prolonged anxiety of undergoing a trial for offences that cannot be brought home to him, and, on the other, to save the time of the Court being wasted over cases in which the evidence would obviously not justify a conviction.[3] Secondly, in order to provide that no person shall be committed for trial without being previously made acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the offence imputed to him and without being given a fair opportunity of meeting them.[4]

2. Legislative Changes.—

(1) The words "subject to the provisions of S. 443" which originally occurred in the section have been omitted in view of the amendment of S. 443 effected by the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act XVIII of 1923.

(2) The words "(Not being a Magistrate of the third class)" were newly introduced into the section by the said Amending Act XVIII of 1923.

3. "Magistrates empowered in this behalf."—As the section now stands the following Magistrates have powers of committal:—

(1) Presidency Magistrates.
(2) District Magistrates.
(3) Sub-divisional Magistrates.
(4) Magistrates of the First-class.

and (5) Magistrates of the Second-class, if they are specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf.[1]

Before the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act XVIII of 1923 even Magistrates of the Third-class could be empowered to commit and in Madras all Magistrates had been so empowered to commit[2] except Thasildar Magistrates of Taluqs, where there were stationary Sub-Magistrates.[3] The introduction of the words "not being a Magistrate of the third class" shows that third-class Magistrates cannot now be so empowered.

The British Consul at Zanzibar is a Magistrate empowered to commit accused for trial to the High Court of Bombay.[4]

A District or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom a Sub-Magistrate has submitted the case under S. 349 has got the power to commit the case to the Court of Session;[5] but he has no power to send the case back to the Sub-Magistrate with directions to commit it.[6]

A Magistrate having power to commit does not lose the power merely because he has been specially appointed to try the accused.[7]

A Presidency Magistrate's jurisdiction to commit a case is not ousted by the fact that the coroner has held an inquiry and has drawn up an inquisition under Act IV of 1871.[8]

4. Effect of committal by Magistrate having no power of committal.—See S. 532, infra.

5. "May Commit."—The procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII is not confined to cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session but is also applicable to cases which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court.[1] In other words;

(1) If the case is one exclusively triable by a Court of Session the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter and cannot try the case himself.[2]

S. 206, Note 5.

And when the facts prima facie disclose such an offence the Magistrate should commit the case and will not be justified in trying the case for deciding whether it constitutes a lesser offence.[3]

(2) Conversely, if the offence is not of a nature triable by a Court of Session at all, this chapter will not apply and the Magistrate must try the case himself.[4]

(3) If the offence is one triable both by a Court of Session and by himself, the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to try the case himself or to proceed under this chapter.[5] As to the proper exercise of discretion in such cases, see Note 6 infra. Even in cases not triable by the Magistrate but triable by a Court of Session or by some other Magistrate, he has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to send the case for trial by the proper Magistrate.[6]

If at the time a Magistrate is asked to take cognizance of a case, he is ab initio convinced that the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session he must commence proceedings under this chapter. But there is nothing to prevent a Magistrate who started with the trial of a case from subsequently deciding to commit it for trial by a Sessions Court.[7] In such cases the proceedings need not be started afresh but the Magistrate may proceed from where he left and continue the enquiry under this chapter.[8]

S. 206, Notes 5—6.

A first-class Magistrate conducted a preliminary inquiry under this chapter and after taking all the evidence in the case, made over the case to a Deputy Commissioner with special power under S. 30. It was held that the Magistrate was bound to have either committed or discharged the accused and that it was irregular on his part to have handed over the case in the manner he did.[9]

6. "Triable by such Court"—Not only exclusively but also from the nature of the case.—It has been seen in Note 5, supra, that in cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the procedure prescribed by this chapter must be adopted and that in cases not so exclusively triable, the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to try the case himself. In the latter class of cases, the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter if in his opinion the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session.[1] Thus in the following cases the Magistrate should not try the case himself but commit it for trial by the Sessions Court:—

(i) If in the opinion of the Magistrate the case involves an offender who deserves greater punishment than he is authorised to inflict.[2] In such cases, the Magistrate must be of that definite opinion. If that is not his opinion,[3] or if the maximum sentence for the offence could be given by himself,[4] the commitment would be illegal.

(ii) If the case involves complicated questions of law and fact.[5]

(iii) If the case involves grave or serious offences.[6]

On the other hand a committal will be improper if made merely because the witnesses for the defence are not in attendance,[7] or on the ground that it is the wish of the parties or in accordance with the terms of a Government circular.[8]

S. 206, Notes 6—9.

In all cases coming within the class of offences not exclusively triable by a Sessions Court the Magistrate must state his grounds in the order so that the Court in revision might see whether the discretion has been properly exercised or not.[9]

A Magistrate can commit a case on the ground that in respect of the same transaction another party of accused is to be tried by the Sessions Court;[10] but not if the connection between the two cases is such that the accused will not be prejudiced by his trying the case himself.[11]

Where an accused is charged before a Magistrate with more offences than one, some of which are triable by himself while the others are triable by a Court of Session, the Magistrate will be exercising a proper discretion in committing the accused for trial by the Sessions Court for all the offences, though there is nothing in the Code making it illegal for him to try the accused for the offences triable by him and to commit the accused for the rest of the offences.[12]

7. Discretion in the matter of committing or discharging the accused.--See S. 213 infra.

8. District Magistrate's interference with the discretion.—When the inquiry is pending before a Subordinate Magistrate the District Magistrate has no power to order committal or otherwise interfere with the discretion of the former.[1] But when a Sub-Magistrate has discharged the accused, the District Magistrate, if satisfied that the discharge was improper, may interfere under S. 436 and order committal.[2]

9. Committal to Sessions Court having no local jurisdiction over the case.—The committal to a Sessions Court having no local jurisdiction in the place where the offence was committed is, according to the High Courts of Allahabad[1] and Bombay,[2] not invalid but is a mere irregularity which will not be set

1. Scope and applicability of section.—This section contemplates a commitment to the Court of Session in two cases, (a) where the offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session and (b) where the offence is triable by a Court of Session as well as by a Magistrate but the Magistrate is of the opinion that it ought to be tried by a Court of Session. Where an offence though triable by a Court of Session is neither exclusively triable by such Court nor one which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by a Court of Session, the Magistrate cannot commit it to the Sessions Court.[1] Where an offence is not triable at all by a Court of Session it cannot be committed to the Sessions. (Vide S. 206, ante.)

A preliminary inquiry as prescribed by this chapter is not necessary where a case is committed to the Court of Session in obedience to the lawful orders of a superior Court.[2]

CHAPTER XII.

OF PRELIMINARY ENQUIRY BY THE MAGISTRATE IN CASES TRIABLE BY THE COURT OF SESSION.

Magistrate may issue his warrant.

179. When a complaint is made before a Magistrate that any person has committed, or is suspected to have committed, any of the offences specified in Column 7 of the Schedule annexed to this Act as triable exclusively by the Court of Session, or which in the opinion of such Magistrate ought to be tried by the Court of Session, it shall be lawful for such Magistrate to issue his warrant to apprehend such person.

S. 207, Notes 2—3.

2. Object of preliminary enquiry in Sessions cases.—See S. 206, Note 1.

3. "Ought to be tried".—In regard to offences which are triable by a Court of Session as well as by a Magistrate this section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate to determine whether the case ought to be committed to the Court of Session for trial or not.[1-a]

There is a conflict of decisions as to the limits within which this discretion is to be exercised. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad,[1] Calcutta[2] and Lahore[2-a] and the Courts of Judicial Commissioners of Nagpur[3] and Sind,[4] that the words "ought to be tried" in this section and S. 347, should be read with S. 254 and that under that section, the Magistrate is bound, in warrant cases, to try the offence himself and not to commit it to the Court of Session if he is competent to try it and if in his opinion he can award adequate punishment. Hence, according to these Courts, the discretion to commit to the Court of Session conferred by the present section is confined to cases in which the Magistrate is not competent to try or, in his opinion, to adequately punish the offence. In other cases, he has no power to commit an offence to the Court of Session. Under this view where a Magistrate is competent to deal with an offence himself, he cannot commit it to the Court of Session merely because a connected case has been committed to the Sessions[5] or because he has been a witness of the identification proceedings in the case.[6] On a similar reasoning (vide S. 245 of the Code), it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that in summons cases, a Magistrate has no power at all to commit the accused person to the Court of Session.[7]

On the other hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay,[8]

Madras[8-a] and Rangoon[9] that S. 254, simply lays down the procedure for the trial of warrant cases where the Magistrate considers it proper and right for himself to go on with the trial and is in no way a limitation to the power of a Magistrate under this section and S. 347 to commit the accused to the Court of Session if he thinks it proper to do so. Hence according to these Courts a Magistrate has power to make a commitment to the Court of Session even where he is himself competent to try it and, in his opinion, to adequately punish it, if there are sufficient grounds for committing the case. In this view, a case can be committed to the Court of Session though the Magistrate himself is competent to deal with it, to avoid a possible conflict of decisions, if a connected case is before the Court of Session.[10] Similarly, the fact that the case involves the decision of complicated and difficult questions of law or fact[11] or that the matter is of some peculiar public importance[12] or that a trial with the aid of assessors would be more satisfactory in the particular case, may justify a commitment to the Sessions notwithstanding that the Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence and award an adequate punishment.[13] But even according to this view the mere fact that a party wishes for the commitment of the case[14] or that it has created a sensation in the accused's community[15] is not a sufficient ground for committing a case to the Court of Session. The discretion, moreover, under the section, is one to be exercised by the Magistrate himself and not even the Government can, by its resolution control it.[16] S. 207, Note 3.

The discretion under the section is a judicial one which should be exercised not arbitrarily but according to the legal principles. Further, the Magistrate must give reasons for his order of commitment. (Vide S. 213). These reasons must show that he has exercised a sound and proper discretion in the matter.[17] He should take a broad and common sense view of the facts and regard them in their true proportion. He should not exaggerate their seriousness for the purpose of committing the case to the Sessions.[18] But if the offence disclosed appears to be a grave one he should not hesitate to order commitment to the Court of Session.[19] Thus cases in which death has been caused by violence[20] or cases of cheating or other offences involving huge sums of money should, it has been held, be committed to the Court of Session and should not be tried by the Magistrate.[21]

As to the procedure to be followed in cases where, after commencing a case as the trial of a summons or warrant case the Magistrate considers that it ought to be tried by a Court of Session, see S. 347 and Notes thereunder.

4. Procedure where there are two or more offences one of which is triable only by a Court of Session.—Where an accused is charged with two or more offences one of which is exclusively triable or ought to be tried by a Court of Session, the procedure should be under this chapter and the proper course is to commit him for trial for all the offences.[1] So also, where several persons are jointly charged, in respect of one transaction and it appears from the facts implicating the whole of them, that one has committed an aggravated offence, which must or should be tried by a Court of Session, the Magistrate should commit all the accused for trial.[2]

5. Joint enquiry—Legality of.—There is no provision in the Code requiring a separate inquiry, in respect of each person prior to commitment. The sections relating to joinder of charges, viz., S. 233 to S. 239 refer to trials only. Hence there is no objection to hold a preliminary enquiry against a person jointly with others but the trial on commitment should be separate.[1]

1. Legislative Changes.—The Code of 1882 did not contain any provision corresponding to sub-S. (2), though the prior Codes contained such a provision. The sub-section was inserted in the Code of 1898. See Note 10, below.

Summons to a witness to attend and give evidence.

186. The Magistrate shall ascertain from the complainant, or otherwise, the names of any persons who may be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and who are likely to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall issue his summons to such persons, requiring them to appear at a time and place mentioned in the summons before such Magistrate to testify what they know concerning the complaint made against the accused person.

Examination of the complainant and witnesses for the prosecution.

193. The Magistrate shall take the evidence of the complainant, and of such persons as are stated to have any knowledge of the facts which from the subject-matter of the accusation and the attendant circumstances.

Discretionary with the Magistrate to take evidence for the defence.

207. It shall be at the discretion of the Magistrate to summon any witness who may be offered in behalf of the accused person to answer or disprove the evidence against him.

S. 208, Notes 2—7.

2. Object of section.—This section is intended for the benefit of the accused. Its object is that the accused should be made aware of all the evidence that he will have to meet on his trial and also that he should have a full opportunity of convincing the Magistrate that there are not sufficient grounds for committing him for trial.[1]

3. "When the accused appears or is brought before him".—It is necessary for a preliminary inquiry under this chapter that there must be an accused person. Where an inquiry was held in which a certain person was not put in the situation of an accused person at all but was himself examined on solemn affirmation like other witnesses and was not given any opportunity of cross-examining the other witnesses, and then was committed to the Court of Session on a charge which was the result of the inquiry it was held that the commitment was illegal.[1]

The "appearance" of the accused under this section may be voluntary and need not be under any process issued against him under S. 204.[2]

4. 'Shall proceed to hear'.—Under S. 344, post, the Magistrate can postpone the commencement of the enquiry for any reasonable cause.

5. Hear the complainant (if any).—The section requires that the complainant shall be heard, not necessarily examined.[1]

6. "Take all such evidence".—In an inquiry under this chapter the Magistrate is bound, before he draws up a charge, to take all such evidence as may be produced (a) in support of the prosecution, (b) on behalf of the accused or (c) as may be called for by the Magistrate,[1] unless the evidence is irrelevant or unnecessary to prove the point in issue.[1-a] He is not absolved from recording all the evidence produced under this section, even in cases where the accused has confessed his guilt inasmuch as such confessions are often retracted later on.[2] It ought to be the endeavour of the Magistrate in the inquiry under this section to ascertain the fact of a particular offence and collect evidence thereof before commitment and not to expect convictions at the Court of Session on a vague and multifarious evidence causing suspicion of several offences but yielding proof of none.[3] As to whether the inquiry should be directed to ascertaining the guilt or innocence of the accused definitely or only to find out if there are prima facie grounds for believing the accused to be guilty, see Notes under S. 209.

7. Evidence for the prosecution.—The object of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction at any cost but to see that justice is done. Hence it is the duty of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who have been eye-witnesses or otherwise connected with the transaction although the evidence of any of them may be favourable to the accused, and an adverse inference can be drawn from the failure to call any material witness.[1] But the prosecution is not under any duty to call witnesses whom it regards as false or unnecessary.[2] If the prosecution has not sent up any material witness, it is the duty of the Magistrate to call such witness and examine him himself.[3] The examination of the investigating Police-officer is necessary in all important cases, especially, of murder and dacoity.[4]

As to the right of the prosecution to abstain from examining some witnesses before the committing Magistrate and produce at the sessions trial evidence not produced in the committing Magistrate's Court, see Notes under S. 286.

See also the observations in the undermentioned case[5] regarding the precautions to be taken as regards Chemical Examiner's Reports and in proving post mortem examinations.

8. Evidence for the accused.—Under this section it is the duty of the Magistrate to take all the evidence produced by the accused, before framing a charge. A commitment order passed without taking the evidence produced for the defence is illegal and liable to be quashed.[1]

9. "In manner hereinafter provided".—These words refer to Chapter 25.[1]

10. Sub-S. (2)—Right of cross-examination.—Section 194 of the Code of 1861 and S. 191 of the Code of 1872 expressly declared the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before commitment. The 1882 Code omitted this provision as a redundancy, since even under S. 138 of the Evidence Act, 1872, which provides that the opposite party has the right to cross-examine the witnesses examined by a party, the accused can cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But this omission gave room for doubts.[1] Sub-S. (2) was inserted in 1898 in order to remove such doubts. The accused is now, of right, entitled to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution during the preliminary enquiry before the charge is framed.[2] The refusal or omission of the Magistrate to give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution is a legal flaw and will render the order of commitment liable to be set aside[3] unless the accused has reserved the cross-examination to the Sessions Court.[4] S. 208, Note 10.

The proper time to exercise the right of cross-examination is, after the examination in chief of each witness. The accused has no right to reserve his cross-examination till the examination in chief of all the prosecution witnesses is over.[5] But the Magistrate has a discretion in the exercise of his inherent power in suitable circumstances to allow the accused, to reserve his cross-examination.[6]

If the Magistrate, in the exercise of his discretion, permits the reservation of cross-examination he cannot then refuse to recall the prosecution witnesses.[7] Thus where the accused applies for copies of statements made by prosecution witnesses to the Police during the investigation with a view to cross-examine the witnesses and the Magistrate has ordered such copies to be furnished under S. 162, he is bound to postpone the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses till such copies are obtained and then allow cross-examination with reference to such statements.[8]

A Magistrate has no power to curtail the cross-examination of witnesses, by directing the counsel for the accused not to put more than 6 to 8 questions to each withness.[9] The cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under this section need not be confined to matters elicited in examination in chief.[10] This sub-section speaks of the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But the Magistrate himself can cross-examine them if he thinks it necessary to do so for ascertaining the truth of the prosecution story.[11] (Vide S. 165, Evidence Act).

11. Sub-S. (3)—Summoning of witnesses.—Under this sub-section, the Magistrate is bound to issue process for the attendance of any witness or the production of any document when such process is applied for, either by the prosecution or the accused[1] unless he deems it unnecessary to do so.[2] If he refuses to issue process, he must record his reasons for his refusal and an omission to record such reasons is an illegality and the subsequent order either of discharge or of commitment is liable to be set aside.[3] Inordinate delay, in applying for summons is a proper reason to refuse process.[4] So also, if it is brought to the notice of the Magistrate that the witnesses were summoned for the purpose of causing vexation to those witnesses, the Magistrate can refuse to issue summons.[5] If the Magistrate has exercised his discretion and recorded his reasons for such refusal the Revisional Court will not interfere with it unless the reason appears on the face of it to be untenable.[6] A Magistrate is bound to take the evidence of the witnesses summoned under this section.[6-a]

The provisions of this sub-section must be read subject to the provisions of S. 204, sub-S. (3) and on private prosecutions the complainant must pay process fees before process can be issued at his instance.[7] As to the right of the accused to call for Police diaries, see S. 172 and Notes thereunder.

209. When the evidence referred to in section 208, paragraphs 1 and 2, has been taken, and he has examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, such Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly.

When accused person to be discharged.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless.

(CODE OF 1872—S. 195, Para. 1 and Expl. III.)

195. When a Magistrate finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person to take his trial before the Court of Session or High Court, or for remanding him, he shall discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be put on his trial before himself, in which case he shall proceed under chapters XVI, XVII or XVIII of this Act.

When accused person to be discharged.

EXPLANATION III.—An order of discharge cannot be made until the evidence of the witnesses named for the prosecution has been taken.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 225.)

225. When a Magistrate finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person to take his trial before the Court of Session or for remanding him, he shall discharge him, unless it shall appear to the Magistrate that such person should be put on his trial before himself, in which case he shall proceed under Chapter XIV of this Act.

When accused person to be discharged.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

(1) The words "or High Court" were added after the words "Court of Session" in the Code of 1872.

(2) If the Magistrate should hold that the accused person should be tried before himself, the Code of 1861 provided that he should proceed under Chapter 14 thereof which related to the procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant cases; but the Code of 1872 provided that in such circumstances the Magistrate should proceed under Chapters 16, 17 or 18 thereof (which laid down the procedure for the trial of summons cases and warrant cases and for summary trials respectively.)

(3) Three explanations were added to the section in the Code of 1872. Explanation I provided that, except in compoundable cases, the absence of the complainant was not in itself a sufficient ground of discharge. Explanation II, provided that a discharge was not equivalent to an acquittal and did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence. Explanation III provided that an order of discharge could not be made until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution had been taken.

Changes made in 1882—

(1) The words relating to the taking of evidence referred to S. 208 and the examination of the accused were added at the beginning of the section.

(2) The words "before the Court of Session or High Court, or for remanding him" which occurred after the words "for committing the accused person to take his trial" in the Code of 1872 were omitted.

(3) The words "or some other Magistrate" after the word "himself" were added in the Code of 1882.

(4) The three explanations to the section referred to above which occurred in the Code of 1872 were omitted.

(5) The second paragraph to the section providing for the discharge of the accused before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution and the defence was added.

Changes made in 1898—

(1) The words "if necessary" were added after the words "he has" and before the words "examined the accused".

(2) The words requiring reasons to be recorded for an order of discharge under sub-S. (1) were added.

2. Scope of Section.—This section specifies the procedure to be adopted where, after the evidence referred to in S. 208, has been taken, the Magistrate finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused. Where there are sufficient grounds, a charge should be framed under S. 210. There may be a further examination of witnesses after the charge is framed (Ss. 211 and 212), and, if the Magistrate is satisfied after such examination that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the Court of Session he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused (S. 213.)

The provisions of this section may be compared with those of S. 253 which deals with the discharge of an accused person in the trial of warrant cases. The following are the chief points of distinction between the two sections.

(1) The ground of discharge under this section is that the Magistrate holds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial; under S. 253 the ground of discharge is that the Magistrate holds that no case has been made out against the accused which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction.

(2) The order of discharge under this section is passed after the evidence for the prosecution as well as that for the defence has been taken; while under S. 253 the order of discharge is passed before the evidence for the defence is taken.

S. 209, Notes 2—3.

(3) Under sub-S. (2) of S. 209, as well as of S. 253 the Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the whole of the evidence referred to in sub-S. (1) of the respective sections has been taken. But under S. 209 the Magistrate must record the reasons whether the order of discharge is under sub-S. (1) or under sub-S. (2); while under S. 253 no reasons need be recorded for an order of discharge under sub-S. (1) though reasons have to be recorded only in case of discharge under sub-S. (2).

(4) There is no provision in the trial of warrant cases for cancelling a charge once framed and for discharging of the accused. There is such a provision in the case of preliminary enquiries in Sessions cases (S. 213.)

3. "When the evidence referred to in S. 208, sub-Ss. (1) and (3) has been taken".—Except in cases coming under sub-S. (2) the Magistrate must hear all the evidence referred to in S. 208, sub-Ss. (1) and (3), before he can consider whether there are, or are not, sufficient grounds for commitment.[1] Such evidence includes evidence both for the prosecution as well as the defence and hence, it is not open to a Magistrate merely on the evidence for the prosecution and before he has taken the evidence for the defence, to consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused.[1-a] The contrary view[2] though tenable under the Codes of 1872 and 1861[3] cannot be considered good law under the present Code in view of the express language of this section.

Under sub-S. (3) of S. 208, if the prosecution or the accused applies to the Magistrate to issue summons for the attendance of any witnesses whose evidence may be desired, it is open to the Magistrate to refuse the application, if he thinks fit to do so. This section by requiring the Magistrate to take the evidence referred to in sub-S. (3) of S. 208 before considering if there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused does not deprive him of the discretion he has under that sub-section to refuse to summon any witness whom a party may desire to summon.[4]

Although it is open to an accused to insist on giving his evidence before the Magistrate frames a charge against him or decides to discharge him, yet, an accused is not bound to tender any evidence in the preliminary inquiry and his refusal to produce any evidence in such inquiry cannot give rise to any adverse inference against him.[5]

5. Sufficient grounds for committing the accused.—In commitment proceedings, what the Magistrate has to see is whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment and not whether there are sufficient grounds for conviction. Hence, where there is a prima facie case for commitment the Magistrate is bound to commit the accused and is not empowered to enter into nice questions of the probabilities of the case and discharge the accused on the ground that in his opinion the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a conviction.[1] But for the purpose of determining whether there is a prima facie case for committal the Magistrate is entitled, at any rate, to some extent, to weigh the evidence[2] (see also Note 3) and if he finds that the evidence against the on with the enquiry against A, and proceedings should not be started against B, until A is either convicted, acquitted or discharged.[1]

S. 209, Notes 6—11.

It has been held that an order of discharge may be presumed to have been made though there is no formal order on the record.[2] Similarly, it has been held that where a person is charged with a major offence and the Magistrate finding that such a charge does not lie frames a charge for a minor offence and proceeds on the basis of such charge his proceeding amounts to a discharge with reference to the major offence so as to enable a Court of revision to direct a further inquiry or a commitment to the Sessions.[3] But, where the prosecution did not press for a charge being framed for a major offence, the mere fact that the accused has been charged with a minor offence does not mean that he has been discharged in respect of the major offence.[4]

7. Effect of order of discharge.—An order of discharge does not operate as an acquittal and does not bar a fresh trial of the accused for the same offence (S. 403). But the person discharged is no longer an accused person and the disqualification of an accused person to give evidence in his own case does not attach to him.[1] A discharge is also such a termination of a prosecution as would entitle the discharged person to maintain an action for damages for malicious prosecution.[2]

See also Notes under Ss. 403 and 435 to 439.

8. Power of Magistrate to award compensation to accused on discharge.—See S. 250 and Notes thereunder.

9. Recording reasons for discharge.—The Magistrate must record his reasons when he discharges an accused person under this section.[1] But he need not, however record a formal judgment as laid down in S. 367 in such cases.[2] Where there are several accused and different accused are discharged at different stages of the inquiry, it is enough if the reasons for their discharge are recorded at the end of the inquiry.[3]

10. Order by Superior Court for further inquiry or commitment to Sessions.—See Ss. 435-439 and Notes thereunder.

11. "Unless it appears . . . accordingly".—Where there are no sufficient grounds for commitment the Magistrate may, in proper cases, try the case himself or send it to any other Magistrate for trial instead of discharging the accused.[1] But where there are good grounds for commitment the Magistrate is bound to frame a charge and commit the case to the Court of Session. He has no power in such cases to send the case to a Magistrate with special powers under S. 30, although such specially empowered Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence.[2]

12. Sub-S. (2): Discharge without completing inquiry where charge is groundless.—S. 195 of the Code of 1872 expressly forbade a Magistrate in a preliminary inquiry under this chapter to discharge an accused person before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution. This provision has been omitted in the latter Codes and sub-S. (2) has been added which expressly permits the Magistrate to discharge an accused person at any stage of the inquiry if he finds that the charge is groundless although he has not fully taken the evidence either for the prosecution or for the accused.[1] Thus, when the account given by the prosecutor himself, of a transaction is of such a nature as to deprive it of a criminal character the Magistrate is justified in concluding that the charge is groundless and in discharging the accused immediately without proceeding further with the inquiry.[2] But an order of discharge under this sub-section can only be passed by a Magistrate who is legally seised of the case. Thus, where a case cannot be taken cognizance of, for want of a complaint from the proper source under S. 195, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused under this sub-section.[3]

OF THE CHARGE.

233. When the Magistrate has determined to send the accused person before the Court of Session for trial, he shall make a written instrument under his hand and seal, declaring with what offence the accused person is charged, and shall direct the accused person to be tried by such Court on such charge. A copy of this instrument shall be forwarded with the record of the preliminary inquiry to the Court of Session before which the accused person is to be tried, and a copy shall also be sent to the Public Prosecutor or to the officer appointed to conduct the prosecution.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

Referring to the circumstances under which a case could be committed to the Sessions, S. 226 of the Code of 1861 used the words "When evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to be sufficient for the conviction of the accused" whereas the words used in S. 196 of the Code of 1872 were "When evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to justify him in sending the accused person to take his trial....".

Changes made in 1882—

(1) The opening words of the section were added in order to make it clear that the Magistrate must consider the evidence for the accused also before determining the question whether he should discharge the accused or whether he should frame a charge against him.

(2) The provision for the supply of a translation of the charge to the accused which occurred in the prior Code (S. 199) was omitted.

(3) The provision that the supply of a copy of the charge to the accused should be free of cost was new.

(4) The Code of 1872 provided that the order for commitment should be made in the charge itself (S. 198 of the Code) whereas the Code of 1882 provided for a separate order of commitment (S. 213).

Changes made in 1898—

Sub-S. (2) to S. 213 was newly added providing for the cancellation of a charge already framed by the Magistrate and the discharge of the accused even after a charge is once framed against him.

2. Scope of section.—Section 209 lays down when an accused person may be discharged in commitment proceedings. This section provides for the framing of a charge in such proceedings. A charge under this section should be framed only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are good grounds for commitment. But the mere framing of a charge does not by itself amount to a commitment which should be made by a separate order under S. 213.[1] It may also be noted that the order of commitment under S. 213 cannot be made immediately on a charge being framed without anything further being done. There is a further procedure to be followed under Ss. 211-213 before an order of commitment can be made. Moreover, it is open to a Magistrate to take further evidence after the charge is framed and if upon such evidence being taken he finds there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused.[2] It is also open to a Magistrate to amend the charge after it is framed and proceed to try the case himself instead of committing it to the Sessions.[3]

S. 210, Notes 2—5.

3. "When upon such evidence being taken".—This expression refers to the evidence mentioned in S. 208, sub-Ss. (1) and (3). The section requires that the Magistrate should consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the Sessions only after such evidence has been taken. Hence, the Magistrate has no power to frame a charge under this section until he has taken all the evidence which the accused may desire to produce.[1] But this does not mean that a Magistrate is bound to summon any witness that a party may desire to call; under sub-S. (3) of S. 208 the Magistrate has a discretion to refuse an application for summons to any witness.[2] Similarly, the Magistrate need not go on recording evidence when it is unnecessary to do so. Thus, when the evidence already let in by the prosecution is sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused, the Magistrate is not bound to take the rest of the prosecution evidence also.[3] S. 208, sub-S. (1) empowers the Magistrate to call for any evidence that he may consider necessary and it is open to him to call witnesses himself and take their evidence for the purpose of finding out if the case is a fit one for committal to the Sessions.[4]

As to power of a Magistrate to frame a charge on the basis of evidence recorded by another Magistrate, see Notes under S. 350.

See also Notes under Ss. 208 and 209.

4. Examination of the accused.—See S. 342 and Notes thereunder.

5. "Is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused".—A charge must be framed under this section only on the Magistrate being satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for commitment.[1] As to

6. "He shall frame a charge".—The task of framing a charge is thus the duty of the Magistrate and is not that of the prosecutor.[1] The Magistrate must base the charge on the materials before him and not merely on the allegations of the complainant or prosecutor. He may frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the evidence though it may be different from that mentioned in the complaint.[2] In framing a charge the Magistrate must confine his attention to the question as to what offence is disclosed on the materials before him and should not be influenced by any considerations as to what would be the effect of framing a charge for a particular offence.[3] Further, the Magistrate should be careful not to mention anything in the charge in a form which is not justified by the materials before him.[4]

Though a Magistrate is at liberty to frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the materials before him he cannot frame a charge which would amount to his prejudging the case which has to be tried by another Court. Thus, where an accused was charged with the offence of wrongful confinement and he raised the defence that he had lawful excuse for his act because the person confined was caught in his house under circumstances which led to the belief that he had committed house-breaking by night, and the Magistrate committed the accused, not only for wrongful confinement, but, disbelieving the defence, also for fabricating false evidence and making a false charge. Held, that the commitment in respect of the two last charges was illegal inasmuch as in putting the accused on his trial on such charges the Magistrate was really prejudging the defence which the accused had raised to the first charge.[5]

1. "The accused shall be required".—After the charge framed against the accused has been read and explained to him, under S. 210, sub-S. (2) above, the Magistrate is bound under this section to require the accused to give into Court a list of witnesses, if any, whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial in the Court of Session.[1] The accused must be clearly and specifically asked for a list of witnesses. It is not enough to put the question "Have you any evidence"? Such a question is ambiguous and might suggest to the accused, only an enquiry as to whether he has witnesses ready in Court.[2]

The language of the section is imperative, and a failure to ask an accused person to give in his list of witnesses, will render his conviction liable to be quashed, even though he has been tried along with others who had been so asked.[3]

It is also necessary that the names of witnesses for the defence must appear on the record. Where a Magistrate omits to enter the names of witnesses for the defence, on the record, and the omission is brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge, he ought not to try the accused, in the absence of such witnesses.[4]

2. "At once".—It is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to file his list of witnesses at once, that is, on the day when the order of commitment was made.[1]

3. Right of accused filing the list.—The accused is entitled, as a matter of right, to have the witnesses named by him in the list, summoned and examined on his behalf at the trial.[1] In the event of the witnesses ignoring or not complying with the summons, the accused is entitled to have their attendance enforced[2] and the Crown is charged with the duty of securing their attendance.[3] The examination of such witnesses cannot be refused on the ground that it would be inconvenient to adjourn the case in order to secure their attendance.[4] When some of the witnesses named in the list given by the accused do not appear, an application for enforcing their attendance should not be refused though made when the case is ready for arguments.[5] A conviction will not however be set aside on the ground that the attendance of some of the witnesses was not enforced unless the accused has been thereby prejudiced.[6] S. 211, Notes 3—5.

4. Refusal of Magistrate to summon witnesses.—A Magistrate may, under the second proviso to S. 216, infra, refuse to summon any witness mentioned in the list on the ground that such witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice. He cannot, however, refuse to summon a witness on the ground that he is suspected to be implicated in the offence with which the accused is charged[1] or that the Magistrate entertains doubts as to the value of the evidence of such witness[2] or that the list contains a large number of witnesses.[3] Where a further list is given under sub-S. (2), subsequent to the order of commitment the Magistrate is bound on receipt of such list to exercise his discretion and state distinctly whether he would summon the witnesses or not. If he is of opinion that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice the Magistrate ought to proceed under the second proviso to S. 216.[4]

5. Reserving of defence by the accused.—Though the language of the section is imperative there is nothing in it which enables the Magistrate to prevent the accused person from reserving his defence for the Court of Session.[1] As a matter of fact the accused is entitled to reserve his defence, and refuse to disclose the names of witnesses whom he intends to call at the trial.[2] Thus where an accused on being asked to give a list of witnesses, does not give one, but says he will file one subsequently, the Magistrate would be acting with sound judicial judgment and in accordance with law, if he does not cross-examine the accused as to the names of his witnesses and what those witnesses would be called to prove.[3] This is because there may be the danger in some cases of the accused running the risk of his witnesses being tampered with. In such a case, it will be wise on the part of the accused to decline to give a list to the Magistrate, and to reserve his defence for the Court of Session.[4] It is also the policy of the law, that the Magistrate should not ordinarily go into the defence evidence in a case exclusively triable by a Court of Session, and where the prosecution has made out a prima facie case for committal to the Court of Session, the Magistrate would be taking upon himself the duties of a superior Court, if he went into the defence evidence.[5]

But an accused person who has reserved his defence cannot claim to keep back any of his witnesses mentioned in the list from being examined by the Magistrate under S. 212 on the ground, that his right of reserving the defence would be prejudicially affected thereby.[6]

6. Failure of the accused to give a list—Effect of.—If an accused person on being asked by the Magistrate to give in a list of his witnesses, declines to give in such a list, he cannot compel the Magistrate after committal, to issue summonses for witnesses on his behalf. He is however entitled under S. 291 to call any witness in the Court of Sessions and examine him, if he is in attendance in such Court, whether or not, he has caused such witness to be summoned.[1] Thus where an accused person has reserved his defence, he might bring his own witnesses, but is not entitled as of right, to have the assistance of the Court to compel their attendance.[2] To entitle him to have his witnesses summoned by the Court, he must satisfy the Sessions Judge, that such witnesses are material for his defence.[3]

Where an accused person gives no list of witnesses to the committing Magistrate and applies at a late stage of the trial in the Sessions Court for an adjournment thereof in order to procure the attendance of witnesses for his defence, it would be perfectly legal for the Court to refuse the application.[4]

7. Further list.—It has been seen that for an accused to have his witnesses summoned as of right, he must give in a list under this section. But where the accused has not given such a list, the Magistrate has under sub-S. (2), a discretion, to allow him to file it at a subsequent time.[1] When a further list has been allowed be filed by the Magistrate under sub-S. (2), it is governed by the same principles as a list under sub-S. (1).[2]

An accused committed for trial before a High Court is entitled under sub-S. (2) to give to the Clerk of the Crown at any time before his trial a further list of witnesses for his defence.

Where a Magistrate finds at the end of a trial, that the evidence discloses an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session and consequently acts under S. 347, and commits the accused for trial before a Court of Session, the proceedings must be treated as under this chapter and the accused should not be deprived of his rights therein.[3] It is submitted that the accused will be entitled in such a case to give a further list of defence witnesses.

1. Scope of the section.—The object of the section is twofold: Firstly to prevent any hasty commitment and to ensure a thorough enquiry previous to the commitment[1] and, secondly to prevent the concoction of false evidence after the commitment.[2] In order to achieve this object the section gives the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any witness named in the list given by the accused under S. 211. Thus he may summon and examine the witnesses for the defence even when the accused has reserved his defence for the Court of Session.[3] The discretion thus vested entitles the Magistrate to ascertain, after weighing the evidence[4] whether there is a presumption of guilt against the accused or whether he is innocent,[5] for it is possible that after hearing the witnesses for the defence the enquiry may result in the discharge of the accused under S. 213, sub-S. (2).[6] But this discretion has to be exercised sparingly and cautiously as any inconsiderate or

3. Commitment to Sessions Court having no territorial jurisdiction to try the offence—Effect: see Notes under Ss. 215 and 531.

4. Reasons for commitment.—The section requires the committing Magistrate to record his reasons for committing a case to the Court of Session.[1] Where the offence is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the reasons must disclose grounds not only for not discharging the accused but also for committing the case to the Court of Session instead of its being tried by the Magistrate himself.[2] As to what are proper grounds for committing a case, see Notes to Ss. 206, 207, 209 and 210.

5. Power of Magistrate to cancel charge and discharge accused or to try him himself.—The enactment of sub-S. (2) in the Code of 1898 makes it clear that even after a charge is framed with a view to commitment the Magistrate has power to cancel the charge and discharge the accused if, in view of the evidence of the defence witnesses examined subsequent to the charge, the Magistrate considers that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the case.[1] The decisions prior to the Code of 1898, which held that the Magistrate had no such power[2] are no longer good law. But the sub-section is only intended to provide for cases in which the evidence recorded after a charge so changes the aspect of the case as to leave no reasonable doubt that a conviction is not sustainable. It does not apply when the evidence merely casts some doubt on the case.[3] But when the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the evidence of the defence witnesses examined subsequent to the charge rebuts that produced for the prosecution or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow, he may act upon his opinion and pass an order of discharge.[4] (See also, S. 209, Notes 3 and 5 and S. 210, Note 5.)

The power to cancel a charge and discharge the accused applies only before the case is committed. Once the case has been committed, the Magistrate becomes functus officio and cannot thereafter change his mind and cancel the commitment or discharge the accused.[5] Moreover, the Magistrate's power under the sub-section arises only in cases where he has taken further evidence after the framing of the charge; where he has not taken such further evidence he cannot cancel the charge once framed and discharge the accused.[6] The power of cancelling a charge once framed and discharging the accused does not apply to trials of warrant cases; the only course open to a Magistrate who after framing a charge in such cases finds that the charge is unsustainable, is to acquit the accused.[7] (See S. 258 and Notes thereunder.) See also Note 1, ante and Notes to S. 210.

6. "After hearing the witnesses for the defence".—The power of the Magistrate under sub-S. (2) to cancel the charge and discharge the accused arises only in cases in which after framing the charge the Magistrate examines further defence witnesses; where further evidence is not taken by him, he cannot cancel the charge and discharge the accused.[1]

As to whether the phrase "witnesses for defence" in sub-S. (2) is wide enough to cover evidence elicited by cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, see Note 7, infra.

7. Right of accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses after charge is framed.—Under the general principles of evidence (See Evidence Act, S. 138) and the specific provision contained in S. 208, Cl. (2), ante, the accused in preliminary inquiries in Sessions cases is entitled as of right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. Ordinarily, the cross-examination of each witness must be made immediately after his examination in chief is over; it cannot be reserved till the examinations in chief of all the witnesses for a side are over, though the Court can, in the exercise of its discretion allow such reservation. Hence, an accused, who has declined to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses then and there and who has not been permitted by the Magistrate to reserve his cross-examination till a later stage, is not entitled, to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed;[1] a fortiori, if he has already cross-examined the prosecution witnesses under S. 208, ante, before the charge was framed, he is not entitled to cross-examine them again after the charge is framed.[2] (Contrast the right of an accused in the trial of warrant cases under S. 256). The expression "witnesses for the defence" in sub-S. (2) refers to witnesses whom the Magistrate in his discretion examines under S. 212, ante; that expression does not include the witnesses for the prosecution who are cross-examined, and therefore, does not confer any right on the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed.[3] But the Magistrate has an inherent power to allow the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed.[4] Further, if the accused did not have an opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses before the charge was framed, he is entitled to cross-examine them after the charge is framed and before the order for commitment is passed.[5]

As to the right of an accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses in cases where the proceedings are started as a trial of a warrant case but subsequently the Magistrate decides to commit the case to the Court of Session, see S. 347 and Notes thereunder.

1. Legislative Changes.—

(1) There was no section corresponding to this in the Code of 1861.

(2) The explanation to S. 197 of the Code of 1872, which corresponded to this section did not contain the equivalent of the words "under S. 213" and "or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478."

(3) In S. 215 of the Code of 1882 the words "under S. 213 or 214" were for the first time introduced and even that section did not

Explanation.—A commitment once made by a competent Magistrate can be quashed by the High Court only, and only on a point of law.

This explanation applies also to S. 196.

(CODE OF 1861—Nil.)

contain the words "or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478".

(4) In the present Code the words "or by a Court of Session under S. 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478" were introduced after the word 'Magistrate'.

(5) The section was amended in 1923. The words "Or S. 214" were removed by S. 11 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 consequent to the repeal of S. 214. Likewise the words "or by a Court of Session under S. 477" were removed by S. 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, consequent upon the repeal of S. 477.

2. Scope of the section.—Where a commitment is made—

(1) under S. 213 by a competent Magistrate, or

(2) by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478, infra, it can be quashed by the High Court and only on a point of law.[1]

When the commitment is not made under S. 213 the section does not apply. Thus a commitment under S. 437, infra[2] or by the Appellate Court under S. 423[3] or by the High Court under S. 526[4] is not one under S. 213 and the High Court can, in revision, consider the propriety of the order of commitment on points both of law and of fact. An order of commitment under S. 347, however, falls within the purview of S. 213 and can be quashed, if at all, only under this section.[5]

When a commitment is not made by a competent Magistrate the commitment may be quashed under S. 532, infra, which does not apply when the commitment is made by a competent Magistrate.[6]

The section is intended inter alia to empower the High Court to quash a committal made to the Sessions Court in all cases in which a Judge of the High Court trying a Sessions case would stay proceedings under S. 273, infra.[7] It does not, however, take away any power to quash commitment prima facie incident to any superior Court receiving commitments from lower Courts as basis of its own jurisdiction,[8] nor does it in any way restrict the powers of the High Court to pass any orders subsequent to the quashing of the commitment.[9] This section does not control S. 494, infra.[10]

S. 215, Notes 3—5.

3. "Once made".—This section refers only to commitments actually made. But where the Sessions Judge acting under S. 437, sets aside the order of discharge and directs a commitment to be made, the High Court can interfere in its revisional jurisdiction and can consider questions of law and fact.[1]

4. Under S. 213, etc.—Commitments are authorised by the Code under Ss. 213, 339, 346, 347, 348, 423, 437, 439, 446, 469, 478, 526. As seen in Note 2 above this section applies only in cases of commitments made under S. 213 or 478.

5. Competent Magistrate.—The phrase "competent Magistrate" has been held to include for the purposes of this section—

(1) a Magistrate to whose file a case has been transferred from that of another Magistrate;[1]

(2) the District Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred under S. 349, infra;[2]

(3) a Magistrate to whose notice an offence contemplated under S. 195, ante, is brought in a judicial proceeding;[3]

(4) a first class Magistrate who had been appointed as a special Magistrate to try the case since he has powers to commit ordinarily under S. 206, supra.[4]

But where a Magistrate commits accused persons who are residents of a different district for an offence committed outside his district, he has no jurisdiction to commit and is not a competent Magistrate and in such cases no reference to the High Court is necessary.[5] Similarly, where a Magistrate who has become disqualified to try a case under S. 556 holds a preliminary enquiry and commits the case without the leave necessary under that section[6] or where a Magistrate holds the enquiry in cases in which a sanction to prosecute is necessary and commits the case without such sanction[7] it has been held that the commitment is not by a "competent Magistrate" within the meaning of this section. However, where a case has been pending before a Magistrate, and he has not been restrained from going on with the enquiry by any order staying the proceedings, his jurisdiction to commit is not ousted and he does not cease to be a competent Magistrate merely on the ground that, after the records had been called for by and sent to, the superior Court, he took advantage of a short interval when the records were sent to him for the purpose of recording the evidence of a particular witness, and completed the enquiry and committed the accused.[8]

6. Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478.—As to the circumstances when a Civil or Revenue Court can make an order of commitment, see S. 478. As to the procedure of such Courts in these cases, see S. 479. As to what are Civil or Revenue Courts, see Ss. 478 and 195.

7. 'By the High Court only'.—It is only the High Court that can quash a commitment under this section. The committing Magistrate himself cannot, after he has once committed the case, quash the commitment and discharge the accused on the ground that the complainant wants either to withdraw or compound the case.[1] Nor can the Sessions Judge to whom a case is committed, quash the commitment and direct a retrial[2] even if the commitment had been in pursuance of his direction.[3] The only course open to the Judge in such cases is to proceed with the trial and acquit the accused if there is no proof of his guilt or if the public prosecutor withdraws the prosecution with the leave of the Court.[4] But when a Magistrate commits an accused who is a foreign subject for an offence in a foreign territory, the commitment is void ab initio and the Sessions Judge can discharge the accused or refer the matter to the High Court for orders.[5]

The Judicial Commissioner of Sind, sitting in the Sessions Division is not divested of his dual capacity as a High Court Judge and he can quash commitments under this section even when sitting as a Sessions Judge.[6] Similarly a single Judge of the High Court exercising original criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to quash a commitment made to that Court under this section.[7]

The principles laid down in S. 537, infra, should generally guide the High Court in dealing with an application under this section.[8]

S. 215, Note 8.

8. On a point of Law.—A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law.[1] The test is to see from the judgment of the Magistrate what his findings on the evidence are and whether those findings are capable prima facie of sustaining the charges he has framed and on which the commitment to the Court of Session is made.[2] Commitment should only be quashed when on the face of it there is something of the nature of a fatal flaw in the prosecution.[3] In dealing with an application under this section the High Court is not required to appreciate the evidence, but it proceeds on the assumption that the facts as stated in the order of commitment will be proved at the trial. All that the High Court is required to apply its mind to, is to see whether, assuming the facts are proved, do they justify the conviction of the accused or not.[3-a] The following are illustrative instances of errors of law justifying the quashing of the commitment:—

(1) Where the commitment is made without any enquiry or examination of the prosecution witness[4] or on an enquiry so imperfect as to result in prejudice to the accused.[4-a]

(2) Where the charge framed is altered or added to at a late stage and the commitment is made without re-examining the witnesses as required by S. 213 and without allowing the production of evidence with reference to the altered or added charge.[5]

(3) Where the commitment is made in the absence of the accused[6] or without giving him a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the committal[7] or of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses[8] or without examining the witnesses tendered by the

The Bombay High Court has also in the case noted below[26] held that where the certificate from the Political Agent (required under S. 188, ante) was received before the commitment was actually made, the commitment was not without jurisdiction and cannot be quashed in the absence of prejudice to the accused.

(13) Where the commitment is made without proper reasons in cases, not triable exclusively by the Court of Session and in which the Magistrate can pass an adequate sentence such as summons cases[27] and warrant cases.[28] But if the Magistrate considers that he cannot award an adequate sentence or on some other proper grounds considers that the case ought to be tried by the Sessions Court, committal is not illegal and will not be quashed.[29]

(14) There is a difference of opinion as to whether a commitment made when there is no evidence at all to convict the accused, can be quashed. According to the High Courts of Calcutta,[30] Allahabad,[31] Patna[32] and Rangoon[32-a] and the Chief Courts of Lower Burma[33] and Oudh[34] it can be done. The decisions of the Lahore High Court are conflicting.[35] The High Courts of Bombay[36] and Madras[37] and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Nagpur[38] hold that want of evidence to sustain the charges is not a ground for quashing the commitment. See also the undermentioned case.[39] The appraisement of evidence

9. Grounds held insufficient for quashing commitment.—The following have been held not to be grounds for quashing a commitment:—

(1) Where the Magistrate finds subsequent to the order of committal that he should not have committed the accused.[1]

(2) Where a joint commitment is made of several accused when, with reference to S. 233, infra, they should have been committed separately. In such cases the Sessions Court can try the accused separately or amend the charge.[2]

(3) Where the committing Magistrate acts on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whose file the case has been transferred to his own Court (S. 350, infra, applies to such a case).[3]

(4) Where the commitment is made merely on wrong exercise of discretion.[4]

(5) Where the only evidence against the accused is the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The reason is that acting upon such evidence in proper cases is not illegal.[5] Where the commitment is made to the same Sessions Judge who gave the direction for prosecution of the accused for the offence of giving false evidence before him, when there is no assistant or additional Sessions Judge in the District.[6]

Magistrate passed under S. 436, infra. The reason is that the order of such Magistrate was not without jurisdiction.[7] S. 215, Note 9.

(7) Where a civil suit is pending in respect of a document in connection of which the accused had been committed by the Civil Judge under S. 478, infra, for using a forged document.[8] In such cases, it would however, be desirable to postpone further criminal proceedings till the decision of the civil suit.[9]

(8) Irregularities of procedure before the Magistrate who transfers the case to a superior Magistrate under S. 349, does not vitiate the committal by the latter Magistrate.[10]

(9) The fact of the common sanction against several accused being set aside by the High Court at the instance of one of the accused is not a ground for quashing the commitment of other accused on merits.[11]

(10) Where the commitment for trial in one and the same case, of some accused is for robbery and of some, for receiving property stolen in that robbery.[12]

(11) Where the commitment is made by a Civil Court (as opposed to Military Court) of a British Born European Soldier, on proceedings taken at the request and consent of Military authorities.[13]

(13) Non-observance of the provisions of S. 360, infra, before the committing Magistrate and partly before the Court of Session.[15]

(14) After the commitment to the Sessions, the fact that graver charges triable by the Court of Session have been withdrawn is no ground for quashing the commitment in respect of the minor charges triable by the Magistrate and thereby take away the right for trial by jury.[16]

(15) Omission to issue notice under S. 204, supra, where the accused is present.[17]

(16) Where the case is triable by a Court of Session the mere fact that the Magistrate did not give reasons for commitment when there was a specially empowered Magistrate who could try the case.[18]

(17) Where an approver whose pardon has been withdrawn has been committed, the mere fact that he was examined as a witness only in the preliminary enquiry and not in the trial before the Sessions Judge or the fact that the pardon had been withdrawn by the District Magistrate and not by the Sessions Judge is not a ground for quashing the commitment.[19]

(18) The fact that some of the co-accused are not yet arrested.[20]

(19) The fact that the evidence is doubtful[21] or that it is insufficient[22] or that the evidence is not direct but circumstantial.[23] The test to be applied, in such cases to decide whether a committal ought or ought not to be made on the facts is this—assuming that the whole evidence telling against the accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury? If the evidence is such that the Judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict then a committal ought not to be made. If there was any evidence which called for an answer—however great the preponderance in favour of the prisoner might be—then the committal was proper.[24]

(20) Where the Magistrate discharged the accused but subsequently becoming aware of the presence of another witness, cancelled his order of discharge took further evidence and committed the accused. It was held there was no prejudice to the accused.[25]

(21) Records disclosing only an offence triable by the Magistrate himself[26] or an offence other than the one charged.[27]

(22) The order for further enquiry under S. 437, infra, which ended in the commitment being made without notice to the accused.[28]

(23) Not examining the defence witnesses under S. 208 for reasons recorded.[29]

similar view but has, in recent cases[3] expressed the view that a commitment cannot be quashed after the accused has been put on his trial and pleads to the charge as it is then too late to object to the commitment. This latter view is shared also by the High Courts of Madras,[4] Lahore[5] and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind.[6] Where the accused is put on his trial and pleads to the charge the Judge should proceed according to law and dispose of the case under Chap. XVIII-E of the Code, or the Public Prosecutor may, with the consent of the Court withdraw the prosecution under S. 494, infra.[7]

11. Effect of quashing commitment.—The primary effect of the order quashing the commitment is to supersede any action taken by the Magistrate under S. 210, and his proceedings subsequent thereto. In such a case it is necessary for the Magistrate to go back to the point at which he took cognizance of the complaint. The order does not amount to discharge of the accused and no fresh complaint is necessary.[1] The accused may be charged again with the offence.[2]

SCOPE AND APPLICABILITY OF SECTION	2

Provided that where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may in his discretion leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly:

Provided also that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay, or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and, if he is not so satisfied, may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal), or may before summoning him require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness.

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness unless deposit made.

(CODE OF 1872, Ss. 358 & 359.)

358. In such inquiries, when the person accused is to be committed for trial, and has given in the list of witnesses mentioned in S. 200, the Magistrate shall summon the witnesses to appear before the Court before which the accused person is to be tried.

When accused person is to be committed.

359. If the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay, or of defeating the ends of justice, he may require the accused person to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that such witness is material.

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness, unless deposit made.

If the Magistrate be not so satisfied, he shall not be bound to summon the witness; but, in doubtful cases, he may summon such witness, if such a sum is deposited with the Magistrate as he thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness.

(CODE OF 1861—S. 228.)

228. If the Magistrate shall be of opinion that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice, he may require the accused person to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that such witness is material, and if the Magistrate be not so satisfied, he shall not be bound to summon the witness, unless such a sum shall be deposited with the Magistrate as he shall consider necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness.

Magistrate may refuse to summon unnecessary witness, unless a deposit be made to defray the expenses of such witness.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872—

In S. 228 of the Code of 1861 it was provided that if the Magistrate was not satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that a particular witness was material, he was not bound to summon the witness "unless such a sum shall be deposited with the Magistrate as he shall consider necessary to defray the expenses of obtaining the attendance of the witness." Hence, even if the Magistrate was not satisfied that a witness was a material witness, he was bound to summon him if the accused was prepared to pay his expenses and deposited the expenses with the Magistrate.[1] This position was altered in the Code of 1872 which left it to the discretion of the Magistrate to summon a witness and empowered him to refuse to summon a witness even though the accused might be willing and prepared to bear the expenses of the witnesses.

Changes made in 1882—

The provision as to leaving it to the Clerk of the Crown to summon the witnesses in cases of commitment to the High Court was new.

Changes made in 1898—

The words "and all other proper expenses" were added at the end of the section.

2. Scope and applicability of section.—It is the duty of the committing Magistrate to see that all the evidence available whether for the prosecution or the defence is before the Sessions Court.[1] The procedure provided in this section is to summon the witnesses named by the accused to give evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court. This applies to the witnesses named by the accused who have not been examined by the Magistrate. The next section applies to the complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution and such of the witnesses for the accused as have appeared and given evidence before the committing Magistrate. In their case, the next section provides that the Magistrate should require them to execute bonds for their appearance and for giving evidence in the Sessions Court at the trial.

S. 216, Notes 2—4.

Under this section, the Magistrate is bound to summon the witnesses named by the accused,[2] except in the cases mentioned in the two provisos. But the duty arises only in the case of persons named by the accused in the list supplied by him to the Magistrate under S. 211, ante.[3] Hence, where, on being asked to give such list, the accused declines to do so, the Magistrate is not bound to summon any witnesses that he may desire to be called subsequent to the commitment.[4]

Under S. 291, infra, the Sessions Judge is bound to enforce the attendance of the witnesses summoned under this section, who fail to appear at the trial.[5]

3. Refusal to summon unnecessary witness.—The Magistrate has no power to refuse to summon a witness on the ground that his evidence will not be material,[1] unless he considers that the witness is included in the list merely for purposes of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice. But where the Magistrate considers that the witness is included in the list for any such purpose, he can require the accused to show how the evidence of the witness will be material. Where he is not satisfied that the evidence of the witness will be material, he may refuse to summon him[2] recording his reasons for doing so.[3] In such a case, he can also summon the witness on the accused depositing the expenses necessary for calling the witness.

4. Expenses of expert witnesses.—

1. Scope of section.—This section empowers the committing Magistrate to compel the complainant, the witnesses for the prosecution and the witnesses for the defence who have appeared in his Court to give evidence, to execute bonds for their appearance in the Sessions Court at the trial and for giving evidence there. If any of these persons refuses to execute the bond the Magistrate has the power to detain him in custody till he executes the bond or till he can be sent to the Sessions Court for giving evidence there. But where a witness has not refused to attend or to execute the bond required of him the Magistrate has no power to demand bail from him instead of a recognizance merely because he has been declared hostile.[1] Though the section does not expressly empower the Magistrate to summon a witness, it has been held in the undermentioned case that the Magistrate has the power under this section to summon a witness to give evidence before the Sessions Court.[2] The prosecution is not bound to examine in the Sessions Court all the witnesses for whose attendance a bond is taken under this section; it is open to the prosecution to decline to examine any witness whom it has reason to believe to be false or unnecessary.[3] But all the witnesses executing bonds under this section must be in attendance at the trial in the Sessions Court till they are discharged by the Court.[4] Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to take bonds from all the witnesses who have been examined in his Court. Only such of the witnesses as are 'necessary' have to execute the bonds under this section.[5]

If any prosecutor or witness shall refuse to attend before the Court of Session or to execute the recognizance above directed, it shall be competent to the Magistrate to detain such prosecutor or witness in custody, until he shall execute such recognizance, or until the time when his attendance at the Court of Session is required, when the Magistrate shall forward such prosecutor or witness under custody to the Court of Session.

1. Legislative Changes.—

Changes introduced by the amendments of 1923—

(1) For the word "Magistrate" in sub-S. (1) the words "The committing Magistrate . . . S. 206" were substituted.

(2) For the words "shall, if the accused so require, be given to him free of cost" in sub-S. (2) the words "shall be given to the accused free of cost" were substituted.

2. Scope of section.—This section empowers the Magistrate even after a case has been committed, to call and examine supplementary witnesses and forward their evidence to the Sessions Court.[1] But the power cannot be exercised by any and every Magistrate; it is confined to the committing Magistrate or any other Magistrate empowered to commit cases to the Sessions. Moreover, the power exists only till the commencement of the trial in the Sessions Court. Where the trial has actually commenced, the Magistrate has no power to add to the record by examining additional wtnesses under this section even under the orders of the Sessions Court.[2] But before the commencement of the trial, this power can be exercised at any time. The Magistrate can exercise the power on his own accord or on being directed o do so by the Sessions Judge who, on examining the record finds gaps in te evidence which he deems it necessary to be filled up.[3] Even in cases in which the accused has confessed his guilt, the Magistrate is justified in examining supplementary witnesses so as to have on the record all the material evidence.[4] The additional evidence can be taken either at the request of the prosecution or of the defence; but the Magistrate should be fair to both the sides and if he examines additional witnesses on one side he should allow the other side to let in rebutting evidence if it desires to do so.[5] Under this section the Magistrate can only supplement the evidence already taken. He has no power to add to or alter the charge after the order of commitment. Similarly, the power to amend or add to the charge under S. 226, applies only to cases where the charge is imperfect as at the date of commitment. That section cannot justify the charge being amended or added to on the basis of supplementary evidence taken under this section.[6]

Under S. 215, commitment can only be quashed on a ground of law. The insufficiency of the evidence is not a point of law so as to justify a commitment being quashed. But the insufficiency may be made up by taking additional evidence under this section.[7]

3. Free copy of Evidence to be given to accused.—The section provides that when the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate a copy of the evidence recorded under this section should be given to the accused free of cost. Such copies are also exempt from Court-fees under S. 35, Court-Fees Act, 1870.[1]
